SCORES NATIONALISTS

Scathing Criticism of Bourassa's Methods By Cabinet Minister.

Montreal, Sept. 7. — In the course of an able address here, Hon. R. Lemieux made a scathing denunciation of the Nationalists' policy towards the British flag. "Do not forget," said Mr. Lemieux, "that the last refuge of scoundrels is particitism and religion. I do not mean that my Conservative friends are scoundrels. But I mean that the Nationalists are, and I do not hesitate to say so. They are that kind of people who, after repeating their yars for so many times, come to believe them in the end. Scoundrels they must be, those who see all the time an attack on the church in our policy, I have travelled all the struction of the Carcinet and the course of Episope. "The professors of Nationalism who preach Anglophobia say the flag with procession of the Sacre Coeur, but the flag which protects this country. I incline before it in the procession of the Sacre Coeur, but the flag which protects this country is the English flag, standing for justice and tolerance. I am as good a believer as any of them, but I claim that our only flag is the Brittsh flag, emblem of justice and tolerance. The evidence of that tolerance is the floerty they are given to preach disource in the profession of the sacre Coeur, but the same that ing—the Premier is proverbially an early riser—he was greeting friends and supporters in North Bay. At 8 o'clock he was on the way to Sudbury, and on his arrival set off forthwith for Copper Cliff, where ne spent the remainder of a busy morning inspecting the mines and chatting with the miners. At 2 o'clock this afternoon, apparently untatigued and in spiendid spirits, he was addressing an enthusiastic open-air assembly of 5,000 gathered on the exhibition grounds, which are situated picturesquely in a natural basin at the foot of the high ridge of gaunt brown rocks.

In opening, Mr. MacKay said he always liked to address a Meaford audience because it voted as it shouted He then lashed Mr. Arthur Hawkes with stinging sarcasm, and was warmly applauded when he said. "A true pointed out that the best contribution to Britain was an united Canada, an enthusiastic French-Canadian shoutents with cries of: "Down with Bourassa and those who ally themselves with hin," and a most unusual and enthusiastic scene took place. "I thought I was an old man," began Sir Wilfrid, who was received with long continued acclaim. "It is true, according to the calendar, that if have reached the end of the span of life allotted to man, but whatever the effect of advancing years, I feel F. W. Trade and Taft.

Montreal, Sept. 7. — Rudyard Kipling, the English author, is taking a hand in the anti-reciprocity conflict. He sent a special message, which appeared in today's Star, telling of the doleful things that will happen to Canada if she adopts reciprocity.

'Sir, you do not know what you are talking about. We are prepared to talk business with you in matters of trade, but in the numatter of politics keep to your own side of the line.' President Taft has stated that he had no thought or intention of annexation, and I believe him to be absolutely honest in so saying. Opening Display of Fall Millinery

Saturday, Monday and Following Days

A Display of Absorbing Interest Rare Beauty and Elegance

This showing of Fall Millinery is in a class alone, not a mere showing of some hats, but a showing of hats gathered with rare perception and painstaking care, and reasons for each selection. "The only time when a woman really feels safe and happy without a hat is when she has gone into her own room and turned the key. A hat to her is not only a hat, but a weapon of defence. She does not feel quite sure of herself without it. Judge then of the importance to her of getting the proper hat! There are certain types of women who simply can not and will not wear extremes, however beautiful or fashionable they may be. With such in mind we have created scores of the moderate type or so-called wearable hats; although the tendency towards smaller shapes allows a wider variety for the conservative woman.

As for colors, ruby, paddy and lettuce green are very prominent and feather mounts, heron sprays, willow plumes, ospreys and wings are

THE VELVET AND METALLIC HATS-By the shimmer and sheen you will know her, the modish maid. Some hats are flat and broad, some resemble the helmet, but all are different from hats of recent years, The flat broad hats are gracefully shaped and will carry an enormous quantity of plumes without seeming overweighted. Some beauties are carried out in the fashionable ruby and corbeau colorings. Ruby is the very newest color in fashionable millinery. Corbeau is the name of a blue darker than navy, and just escaping black, the crow color. Owing to the prevalence of the above-mentioned metallic effects, the greens and bronzes that tone them are much used, and lettuce is another color that has made its appearance in Paris. Metal effects are seen not only in millinery, but in hand bags, scarfs and other decorative articles which play so important a part in the autumn wardrobe.
