THE MURDERER

OF MONACO

How Justice Was Embarrassed by Lack of Guillotine.

There is a little kingdom on the shore of the Med.terranean Sea, between France and Italy. The name of this kingdom is Mounce. Its population is amounting to the shore of the medital than the same of land to a soul. But there is a real kinglet in this little kingdom by the sea, and the kinglet meet the same of land to a soul. But there is a real kinglet in this little kingdom by the sea, and the kinglet meet the same of land to a soul. But there is a real kinglet in this little kingdom by the sea, and the kinglet have reprising—a palaeut and the kinglet meet the significant. To be sure, there is a tax on tobacce, on whice and on bready, as drink and smoke, yet their number is so small that they kinglet would not have conget to support himself, is court, and his officials, if he did not special income is from the gambling establishment that remains the proportor gains all the time. And the kinglet by sums of money, because this is the only gambling establishment that remains the same of money, because this is the only gambling establishment that remains the court, and since then all those bent upon gambling by there. There he were prohibited was they used to bring about many disgreeding the same of money, and the proportor gains all the time. main of their princes, but there was nobody to prohibit it in Monaco. So it remains there.

And since then all those bent upon gambling go there. There they lose their money, and in the meantime the kinglet gains. You cannot easily make marble palaces out of honest labor. The little Czar of Monaco knows well that this is a wicked business, but what shall he do? He must live. To live on the income from brandy and wine is not much better, he thinks. So the kinglet lives, reigns, grabs money, and conducts affairs in his palace just as the real great kings do.

There is the same pomp at the coronation; the kinglet awards medals, reviews parades, his councils and laws and courts of justice; the same as real kings, only on a small scale.

One day, about five years ago, a murder took place in the land of this kinglet, The people of that kingdom are a peaceful lot, and such a thing never happened before. The judges assembled, investigated, and tried the case. There were judges and prosecutors, and jurymen and lawyers. They tried the case, and condemned the man to capital punishment—to death by the guilloune. Very well. The decree was presented to the kinglet. The kinglet read the sentence and confirmed it. The murderer should be put to death. But there was one trouble—the kingdom had neither the guillotine aor the executioner to be head the criminal.

The ministers began to think what to do and they seen decided to inquire of those of the kinglet to more decided to inquire of those of the case, and confirmed it. "But the prisoner will run away!" "Let him go!" said the first.

This was reported to the King. He, too, was satisfied. The guard was discharged. Now they wondered what the prisoner would do. They saw that when the dinner hour arrived the criminal come out, looked around for the guard, and, not finding him, went to the kitchen of the king to get something to eat. He took everything they gave him there, went back to the prison, closed the door behind him, and stayed there. The next day he did the same. He went for his food, came back—but did not go away! What now? Again they thought.

"Let us rather tell him plainly," they said, "that we don't want him there any longer. Let him go."

Very well. The minister of justice

He goes regularly for his pension. Getting it, he steps into the gambling house and puts up two or three francs. Sometimes he wins, sometimes loses. Then he returns to his house and leads a life of peace and happiness. It was forturate for the man that he did not commit the crime in a land where they are not too stingy either to cut one's head off or to maintain permanent prisons.—Translated from Russian of Tolstoy.

tion, was charged in the police court yesterday with stealing another locket from Wenger's store. Chief Langley read Davis' record, which he had received from San Francisco, and which showed the man to be a professional pickpocket. Magistrate Hall sentenced him to two months with hard labor, to date from the expiry of his present term, Boatswain Killed.—While the steamer Praemar, which arrived here yesterday was proceeding up the Chinese coast between Hongkong and Moji. the Chinese boatswain, who was working between decks fell to the bottom of the steamer and striking on his head received a fearful concussion from which he died a short time afterwards. His body is still on board the steamer, and will be taken back to Hongkong, it being understood that the company must take the remains of any member of the crew who dies during the voyage back to the place at which they shipped. The Chinese are like the Indian sealers in this respect, always wishing to be buried in their native country.

No Strike.—Capt. Bissett of the Selkirk states that there is nothing in the reports about a strike on the Skeena river. He returned from Rivers Inlet and received no information whatever
