A WELL-KNOWN JOCKEY DIES.

Jockey William Reagan, who was thrown by the filly She in a race at Clifton last Mon day, died at the home of his employer, Mr. James McCormick, near Clifton, N.J., early Sunday morning. Whether death resulted from the effects of the tumble he received from She or from an attack of pneumonic which set in on Wednesday, is not yet known. The boy's body was removed yesterday afternoon to Brighton Beach, where his parents lived, and out of respect for his memory McCormick scratched all the horses he had entered in the several races at Clifton. The management of the Clifton track donated $250 to defray the expenses of Reagan's funeral. Reagan was 18 years old and this was his second year of public service in the saddle. He began riding in races at Brighton Beach during the summer of 1888, his first victory being on "Billy" Lakeland's filly Peg Woffington, when she won the run-longs. THE CONGO CANNIBALS.

Mr. Herbert Ward's Interesting Lecture Mr. Herbert Ward, one of the officers the Stanley expedition, whose name has been prominently before the public since his return from Central Africa ciation Hall last night to a large audience on "The Congo Cannibals of Central Africa, and judging from the frequent bursts of ap plause it was evident that his efforts to ple and instruct were well appreciated. Owing to the absence of the chairman, Mr.

W. D. Matthews, ex-Ald. James Lobb introduced the lecturer. On taking his stand on the platform Mr. Ward was heartily applauded. He is of incidium height and build, but sturdily made, with a decided English accent. His eye is bright and searching while his appearance indicates the indomitable courage which he possesses. He first, by the use of a map, gave an account of the discovery of the Congo River, the dangers and privations the little band had to encounter, and also a description of Dr. Livingstone's travels through the central part of the continent and his subsequent death. Then he gave a vivid description of Stanley's expedition through the central lakes, and the descent of the Congo River, attended by dangers which were only escaped through the courage and zeal of the famous explorer.

The lantern views were works of art, the illustrations being prepared from photographs and from drawings from Mr. Ward's own land. They showed the types of the Congo cannibals, their mode of living and the barbarous practices they were accustomed to. Every view was dealt with at length by Mr. Ward and his remarks were replete with laughable anecdotes relating to the appearance of a white man among the ignorant and superstitious blacks. Mr. Ward had gained some notoriety amongst these people by his knowledge of medicine, and on one occasion having saved the life of a child he was approached by the mother and presented with an egg which she claimed was all she could give to show her gratitude. This, he thought, a good instance of their natural thankful disposition, but he was greatly taken back when cooking the egg for his breakfast to find that it was a bad one. The tribes in the central part of the continent, he held, were not so degraded as those living near the coast, as here they are confirmed cannibals and slay and eat all whom they come across.

Mr. Ward was heartily applauded at the close of his interesting and undoubtedly instructive lecture.
