

So the Crawfords gave up their idea of taking up ground in the Lake Wabamun country, and settled down to farm their broad acres in comfort and plenty, for it was old man Arlo's money that had purchased the stock and crops and land of Mr. Crawford before the trial, and thus it all reverted to him again.

Fred sent the price of Montana Jenny to Blue Pete, and that worthy animal lived to a good old age, maintaining her great reputation to the last, but Ruby and Smiler died the same winter as old man Arlo.

And so, as Athabasca Bill was wont to say, it all came right in the end.
