

with the reasons adduced for those proposals and possible amendments, are not even considered by the members of the other place.

In terms of the legislative process, that is ridiculous, unless one assumes that honourable senators, regardless of which side of the aisle they sit on, have nothing to say that is even worth considering. I do not think that is the true view of the members of the House of Commons.

The point I want to make, honourable senators, is that there is something wrong with a legislative process which makes it impossible for the House of Commons to accept, or indeed to reject, if the members of the House of Commons feel that that is what is called for, proposals and amendments suggested by honourable senators. I say that regardless of which political party happens to be in power at the moment.

To sum up, honourable senators, I think that this is an unfair bill, and I am frustrated because, given the existing process, I think that the members of the House of Commons are not likely to realize in time how unfair this bill is.

On motion of Senator Corbin, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.
