

perfectly splendid, with his single exception. If ever a business proposition was bungled, this one has been by him. My faith in his word is absolutely nil at present. Worse, he has dropped Mc Gill into a nasty light: this by his last letter to me, to which I refer Mr. Burrell. The papers having reference to the teachers' ship which were in your office and to which you gave me access read as quoted in Mr. Burrell's letter "£250 plus £50 travelling expenses." That was all that I knew. I should certainly never have risked coming to Scotland on $1,000 for 12 months - I would have been crazy. But £250 (approx. $1250), plus £50 (approx. $250) was a different matter - perfectly safe and satisfactory. If the payments are made only to
