long before his trial, that the whole world would refuse to accept any condemnation of Ferrer, whether by civil or military court in Spain.

After his execution, or his "judicial murder," as the Manchester Guardian called it, fifty-nine French municipal councils decided to name a street in his honor. The numerous Masonic lodges, under the National Federation of Free Thought, decided to place a monument of Ferrer just in front of the great church of the Secret Heart. The Freenasons of Troyes have asked the French Grand Orient to begin a movement for placing his statue near the Vaticau in Rome. Mayor Nathan of Rome eulogized Ferrer and denounced his execution in the most violent terms. In France the Federation of Labor proposed an insurrection in his name, and the Congregational Union in England joined those who hailed him a martyr.

That the affair was a serious and bad thing for Spain cannot well be denied. He was condemned before a secret military tribunal, after a civil tribunal had acquirtive from the first time.

The daily schedule meant rising at 5.30 to base is a system of visitation being kept up.
