La MARQUISE de FONTENOY

Scotch Earldoms That Will Last Till Time Ends—Origin of The Campbells are Coming—Estate Hundred Miles in Length—The Jew in Russia

(Copyright, 1911, by the Brentwood Company.)

King George III notified the Marquis of Breadalbane, as the keeper of his privy seal of Scotland, to be in official attendance at Edinburgh, when the court takes up its residence in Holyrood Palace next month. Lord Breadalbane has many titles besides his marquisate, including one of nobility in the United Kingdom, two Scotch earldoms, three viscounties, half-a-dozen baronies and a baronetcy.

I may add that this first Earl of Breadalbane availed himself of this right, and barring from the succession his eldest son, who was an imbecile, nominated his second son.

The story of how King Charles came to bestow these honors upon Sir John Campbell is a most peculiar one, for Sir John purchased, at a relatively small cost, all the liabilities of the sixth Earl of Cathness, and then dunned that unfortunate man, until he made over to him a reversion, not only of his estates, but also of his earldom, and other hereditary titles.

When this Lord Cathness died, in 1672, Sir John Campbell proceeded, by virtue of this act of reversion, and with the sanction of the authorities to invade Cathness, at the head of a band of armed retainers and clansmen to enforce his rights. The historic event is commemorated in the well known song "The Campbells are coming!" He then made a demand upon King Charles, to whose restoration he had largely contributed, for a patent confirming him in the titles of seventh Earl of Cathness, and of Lord Sinclair of Berriedale.

Four years later the courts and the House of Lords, to which George Sinclair, cousin of the sixth Earl of Cathness had presented his claim, decided in the petitioner's favor, and Charles II, convinced of his error, induced the former, Sir John Campbell to abandon the Earldom of Cathness to George Sinclair, and bestowed upon him instead the Earldom of Breadalbane and of Holland, with the curious remainder which I have mentioned.

The Earldom of Holland has no relation whatever to the Netherlands, but was created in favor of Sir John Campbell, by reason of his marriage to Mary Rich, daughter of Lord Holland, with whom he had a large estate, and it is said that Sir John was so fearful of not being able to get away with his bride's dowry that he had a perfect army of Campbell clansmen, armed to the teeth, with him to London for the marriage; immediately after the ceremony he set out for Scotland, carrying his bride behind him on horseback; while her dot of £30,000 was carried in a chest being on a pole in front of him, guarded on every side by his Highlanders.

The father of the present Marquis of Breadalbane, that is to say, the sixth earl, was not allowed to succeed to the family honors and estates, which extended over some 20,000 acres, without a severe struggle. For a claimant appeared in the person of a certain Charles William Campbell, the father of the sixth Earl, who was illegitimate.

It seems that the sixth Earl's grandfather, Captain John Campbell of the Fencibles, eloped with the wife of a country doctor of the name of Christopher Ludlow, with whom he lived from thenceforth in Scotland and elsewhere, although he wedded ecclesiastically as soon as Dr. Ludlow died. The couple had three children, an elder son and two younger sons, twins who died in infancy.

The questions raised were as to whether or not Dr. Ludlow was still alive at the time of the birth of the eldest son, and, secondly, whether his death would have had the effect of annulling the union well as a Scotch common law marriage; and, thirdly, the subsequent ecclesiastical marriage would be the ecclesiastical marriage in the eyes of Scottish law the birth of the boy, if born during the lifetime of Dr. Ludlow.

After long deliberation, and much discussion, the committee of privileges of the House of Lords, by a small majority, decided in favor of the legitimacy of the sixth Lord Breadalbane's father, largely owing to the impossibility of obtaining precise date of Dr. Ludlow's death; and the consequence was that the committee of privileges, confirmed the sixth Lord Breadalbane in his honors and estates.

The present Lord Breadalbane is no stranger to America, which he has frequently visited with the marchioness, and has also spent some time in the Rockies, in pursuit of his game. He is a rather stately personage, who enjoyed the high favor of Queen Victoria, whom he served as her treasurer and as lord steward of the royal household and who presented to him the Order of the Garter.

The Evening Chit-Chat

By RUTH CAMERON

"PLAY with your children more, mothers and fathers—both for their sakes and your own."
This is the urgent plea running through a book about games recently published by the New York director of physical training.

For it seems to me that it is just as much a parent's duty to his children to play with them as to work for them; just as much a parent's duty to himself to get happiness as to get recreation elsewhere.

One of O. Henry's most powerful stories is called "The Guilty Party." The scene of this story is a game on one of the most crowded streets of the East side, on which "as twilight falls Sata gets up his recruiting office."

"Papa, won't you play a game of checkers with me if you aren't too tired?"
The red-haired, unshaven, untidy man sitting shoeless by the window, answered with a frown:
"Checkers? No I won't. Can't a man who works hard all day have a little rest when he comes home? Why don't you go out and play with the other kids on the sidewalk?"

"John," she said, "I don't like for Lizzie to play in the street. They learn too much there that ain't good for them. The house all day long. It seems that you might give up a little of your time to amuse her when you come home."
He drew her in the next world and sees Lizzie brought before the bar of judgment for punishment.

And what is everybody's astonishment when the angel court officer says to the angel policeman: "Now you quit making these false arrests or you'll be trampled." The guilty party you've got to look for in this case is a red-haired, unshaven, untidy man, sitting by the window reading in his stocking feet, while his children play in the street.

Now perhaps that's a too highly colored illustration of my thesis to appeal to you.
Well, here's a much simpler one.
One of the women who work for us was telling me the other day about her only little girl who died when she was ten years old.

"Oh, Miss Ruth," she said, "I think so often how my little girl used to hug me to come out after supper and play croquet with her. And I'd say, 'Mercy, no, I've got too much to do.' And now how I wish I'd played the croquet and had some fun with her sometimes, and been sort of friends the way other mothers are. I thought then that the most important thing in the world was to keep the house and her clothes spic and span, but now I wish I'd known enough to let things go more and sometimes played with my little girl."

Of course that's a too picturesque as O. Henry's story, but it has the merit of being absolutely true.
One of the greatest safeguards against evil a child can have is the genuine friendship and companionship of its parents.

One of the greatest keep-young-tonics a father or mother can have is a habit of playing and romping and being friends with the children.
Every home where there are children has a fountain right within itself if the grown ups only know enough to find it.

Everyone knows that children are so bubbling over with lightheartedness and love of life that anyone who is with them can't help getting some of the overflow.
If you don't play with your children, fathers and mothers, you are neglecting one of the greatest of life's opportunities—both for them and for you.

One of the greatest safeguards against evil a child can have is the genuine friendship and companionship of its parents.

90 PER CENT OF CANADIANS ARE FOR RECIPROcity

Senator Dandurand Tells New York Canadian Club That Party is Preferred by Some to Prosperity

New York, June 22—Senator Raoul Dandurand, of Montreal, in an address at the banquet of the Canadian Club of New York tonight, declared that many well informed people in the Dominion of Canada were of the opinion that the present reciprocity arrangement with the United States, would be favored by 90 per cent of the Canadian electorate if it were not made a party question.

Senator Dandurand said in addressing the club which was entertaining President President Tait was the principal guest. The president said in part:
"In the summer of '92 I went to Canada to spend three months' vacation. I was so delighted that I spent my vacations there ever since until I was called to a hotter place. Owing to a foolish tradition which is not in the constitution of the United States, I may not spend them there now. However I am still a tenant of a Canadian landlord near Murray Bay and I am looking forward to a prospect near at hand when I can resume my Canadian residence there."

A ripple of mirth broadened to a roar as the president paused. When the last echo died away he resumed in serious vein:
"The success of Canadians in mingling together the descendants of the French and English races in one nation is worthy of the highest commendation.
"People talk about annexing Canada to the United States or the United States to Canada. It is entirely unnecessary; all that we ought to do is to cultivate as fully and completely as possible the good neighborly relations. The closer we come together commercially and socially, the better for both of us."
