Lord Milner also took occasion to deal shortly but emphatically with the attitude of the people of Great Britain towards Canada. JURY CANNOT AGREE

No Verdict Is Found in Kimball Murder Case at Chatham.

JUDGE CONDEMNS AFFAIR

Mr. Justice Latchford In Address to Jury Charges Strongly Against the Chief of Police, Who Shot Prisoner Healey as He Was Escaping -Prisoner Says Gun Went Off

by Accident Climbing Fence.

Chatham, Oct. 29.—After several hours' deliberation the jury in the case of Elliott J. Kimball, formerly chief of police of Leamington, charged with the murder of Wm. J. Healey, before Justice Latchford, decided just before Justice Latchford, decided just before midnight yesterday, they could not agree. The case went to their hands at 5.30 p.m. Tuesday. Kimball shot Healey while the latter was runing-away to avoid arrest for jumping a board bill.

Kimball himself was the last witness examined. He stated that the shooting of Healey was purely accidental, the revolver being discharged through a jar on the fence he was climbing over. Other witnesses testified that after the shooting Kimball had remarked that he had shot the man, who was getting away from him. None of these witnesses could remember having heard him say that the shooting was accidental.

ber having heard him say that the shooting was accidental.

Both Prosecutor Arnoldi and the solicitor for the defence, O. L. Lewis, K.C., made long addresses to the jury, Mr. Lewis emphasizing the fact that both the crown and court had barred evidence pertaining to Kimball's good character.

His lordship Justice Latchford made a strong charge against the prisoner. He belittled the prisoner's statement that the shooting was accidental.

"The character of Healey has nothed to do with it," he continued. "The "The character of Healey has nothing to do with it." he continued. "The lowest character in this country is protected by law. The unfortunate woman, Mary Wellington, whose illegal actions caused the shooting of this wretched man, says that she warned Kimball that Healey was dangerous, but we do not hear of Kimball using his gun till Healey ran away from him. Many constables appear to be under the misapprehension that they can shoot down a fleeing man. There is no law in this or any other civilized country which allows them to do so, and the sooner constables get this erroneous idea out of their heads, the better it will be for them."

their heads, the better it will be for them."

Justice Latchford said that there were three verdicts the jury could bring in—murder, manslaughter, or not guilty. If they believed Kimball's story in the face of all the other evidence they then might bring in the latter verdict.

On opening the case the attorney for the defence objected to the charge of murder, but the court overruled. stating that the grand jury had decided upon that charge and he would have to abide by its decision.

The prosecution argued that, not-withstanding that Kimball was an officer, his case should be considered in the evidence the same as an ordinary citizen.

the evidence the same as an ordinary citizen.

Attorney for the defence elicted the fact that Miss Mary Wellington had lived with Healey as his wife. In this connection she said that she had known thim about a year. She had been intimate with him about three weeks. They had lived together as man and wife in Leamington and Tilbury. Healey had led her to believe they were married by showing her a false marriage certificate which he said was signed by a minister.

The woman who made the complaint which had caused Kimball to attempt the arrest testified that she had told him that Healey was a desperate man and would likely resist arrest.

The court commented that this warning had probably had its effect on Kimball and led up to the shoot-
