TOLD OF A DIAMOND RING

TOLD OF A DIAMOND RING "Gentlen.en of the jury," said Mr. Justice Prickett, speaking in rapid and easy tomes. "this is a case which will not, I imagine. The facts are of a type with which we are and and and the select of the select of the select and see easily with easily a select of the select and see of a type with which we are and successful robbery—from a jeweller's window, and one of the stolen articles— and successful robbery—from a jeweller's window, and one of the stolen articles— and successful robbery—from a jeweller's window, and one of the stolen articles— and some gold bracelet—is found in the possession and unless she gives a rea-sonable account of the matter, you will be justified in inferring that she took it, know-ing it to have been stolen. Gentlemen, the prisoner's counsel suggests to you that so rothe circumstances of the sale. As for the other hypothesis—well, gentlemen, it is for you to say what you think of it." "Consider your verdict, gentlemen," sid the clerk of the assize. The prisoner was very pretty, and very peconingly dressed, and she cried, in a yor three of the jury were of opinion that her counsel, and they leaned to an acquittal. But the summing-up was dead against herthe what he really wanted to do was to see Lady Prickett's jewels. The judge marvelled greatly, but he said nothing, and took steps to have the Chief Commissioner's desire satisfied. After an awkward pause the jewel-case was produc-ed, and its contents exhibited. "That's one of 'em!" cried Mr. Samuel in an excited tone, pouncing upon some-thing. It was Lady Prickett's new diamond ring! "That's one of 'em; TI lawear to it anywhere! Our private mark and number are on it, as you can see for yourself, my lord _J. S., 230." He whipped a watch-maker's lens out of his pocket and invited "this lordship" to inspect the thing for him-self. <text><text><text><text><text><text><text><text><text><text><text><text><text><text><text><text><text><text><text><text><text><text><text><text><text><text><text>

He hemmed and hawed, spoke of secret but reliable and positive information, pro-tessed his pertect devotion to the British Bench as represented by Mr. Justice Prickett, and finally, in some roundabout fashion, gave that dignitary to understand the what he really wanted to do was to HISTORICAL IMPOSTURES of Those Which Have Made Gre Commotion in Their Time. The list of strange impostures in history ould of itself fill pages; the narrative...of their conception and fulfilment would occu py several volumes. Some of them have been quite purposeless; some have been daring and well-effected; but the shrewdest and most daring of them all have been criminal in design, and too often successful. minal in design, and too often successful. An apparently purposeless imposture was perpetrated in Saltcoats at the beginning of this century. Helen Oliver, a maid-ser-vant at a farm-house, was supposed to be courted by the ploughman there, but this person proved to be a woman in diaguise. Helen then helped herself to a suit of her brother's clothes, took his name of John,

Cutting Down The Telegram. "John," said the old chemist to his son, "I will give you one hundred pounds to go away with. Maybe, as you don't like my business, you will find a better one." Three weeks later the young man landed in New York. A month later, finding but six pounds in his possession, he deter-mined to sail home again. It was best to let his taher know belorehand; but how? A letter would be too slow, so off went John to the telegraph office. "It yeents a word to London, sir," answered the polite clerk to his inquiry. "I want to tell my father I've spent all my money, and I'm sorry, and I'm coming home, and want him to forgive me, and a tot of other things, and I can only pay for six words to tell him everything," said John. "Cut it short," replied the clerk. Johns at down and thought. An hour after, to his intense astonishment, the old man received the following telegram :----"Youlla, London. Fatted calf for one."

Could Afford to Sall It Cheap.

Could Afford to S sli It Cheap. Willie and Johnny set up a lemonade stand the other day, says an exchange, and a gentleman was their first patron. Wille's sign read: "Four cents a glass," Johnny's modest announcement was: "Two cents a glass." Being a man with an eye to the fact that a "penny saved is a penny earned," the customer bought a glass of Johnny's lemonade, paid the two cents due, and casually inquired: "Why is yours cheaper than your brother's?" "Cos mine is the lemonade that the puppy fell into.

About the middle of the last century a French vessel reached Martinique, bearing a very handsome youth, who was introduced as the Prince of Modena. He was received with great homage by the people of the place, and was actually appointed governor of the island after a farcical passage with the acknowledged governor, Marquis de Caylus. The steward of the Prince's estates in the island gave him unlimited money, believing that he was supplying him on justifiable grounds. In fact, the young man, who was certainly a princely looking personage, had a royal time for six months. Then, how-ever, expecting news from France of his imposture, he suddenly discovered that his health was failing, and he set sail for Bor-deaux amid demonstrations and salutes. A little later letters arrived which showed that the wals failing and he set sail for Bor-deaux amid demonstrations and salutes. A little later letters arrived which showed that the wole affair was a masquerade, and that the real Prince had not been out of Europe. When the young impostor ar-rived in Europe he was very summarily arrested, and after some curious proceed-ings he disappeared. Mout a dozen years ago a man named August Meves died in London after prose-cuting a preposterous claim to the crown of France. The Dauphin, the son of Louis XVI., is supposed to have died at the age of ten in the Temple Prison at Paris. But Meves knew better than this. He sail his grandmother told her reputed son that in 1794 the young Dauphin was rescued, and another substituted for him in the prison. The lad was taken to London and tended by a music master, who was the wonam's husband, till 1818, the year of the Revolu-

The reputed son of the music master was thus alleged to be the King of France, and August Meves, as his child, claimed the crown. But the story was too obviously absurd, and he was only laughed at. A much more peculiar imposture than the foregoing must conclude the list. It was in the sixteenth century that Bartrande
