Agassiz had been deeply cogitating on a fossil which had been recently discovered, having new and remarkable peculiarities. the morning had again forgotten all that he had desired to remember. He determined that it he should ever dream of it again, that he would make the strongest effort to awaken, and have paper by his bedside, on which to fix the information. Accordingly, on going to bed, he placed some paper and a pencil beside him, again thinking of this wonderful fossil, when what was his delight, during sleep, at finding the whole for a third time clearly pictured before him! But no! he still slept on, and in the morning was distressed beyond measure to find that the whole had entirely vanished from his memory. In this disconsolate state he commenced to dress, but had not proceeded far when his eyes fell on the paper and pencil by his bedside; and going to them, he was astonished to find an accurate drawing of the complete fossil, with all its parts.

It was, in fact, the picture of the vision, and gave him again all he had been seen in his sleep. he tells this himself, and says that he cannot account for the picture being there, whether he got up and did it himthere, whether he got up and did it himself, or whether it was done by other means nate enough to remove the covering, and there was displayed before his eyes the three dreams. If he were not a professor we think he might, after such a fact, believe in spiritual laws and energies, and in him-

How provoking it is to see those married people looking to self-satisfied and consequential, at the heads of their families, as if they had done the State of great service. Why, as to children, they are as plenty as flies in August, and about as troublesome; every alley, and court, and garret are swarming with 'em; they're no rarity, and poor miserable wretch can get a wife, enough of them, too, such as they are.

In mediately outside the city, the shock was much more severe than within the limits. On the Little River road, along the valley of the St. Charles, it is represented as having been so severe that we are only surprised more serious damage was not done.
