In the report of the debates in the House of Commons, on the 28th of June, 1835, contained in the Times newspaper of the 29th of June, the following conversation is stated to have taken place:

"Mr. Roebuck hoped that the honorable baronet (Sir George Grey) would not object to the production of the despatches of Lord Aylmer, relating to the Assembly of Lower Canada, and also to the production of the fourth report made by the committee of that Assembly in regard to Lord Aylmer's conduct.

"Sir George Grey said, there was no objection to the production of Lord Aylmer's despatches for which his noble friend, the member for Devonshire, intended to move that evening. From the moment that charges were made against him, Lord Aylmer had courted investigation; and he had expressed a wish at an early period of the session that his despatches should be produced. The government, however, then thought it might be inconvenient to produce them until the discussion on the motion of the honorable member for Bath was over. There was now no objection to their production, and Lord Aylmer was most anxious that they should be laid before the house.
