Miss Aurilla's Responsibilities

"My work isn't as responsible as it used to be," declared little Miss Aurilla Peters, for nearly forty years dressmaker at the Corners. "What with all the ready-mades and Paris fashions coming out in most everything, even the newspapers, folks can choose for themselves. It wasn't so when I began. They didn't know what they wanted half the time, and when they did, like as not I had to convince them they couldn't have it. You wouldn't believe the things some folks would ha' put on their backs if I had let them!"

"There was Angeline Moss, now—pretty as a pink, and all for gay colors and flounces and fur-below. Well, she could carry them off if anybody could, and I never crossed her so long as she was the only one concerned; no, nor after she was engaged to Solly Simkins, either. Her trousseau was most done before she broke it off an' took up with the new minister. Amazing what a serious-minded man will think he sees in a little fool flutter-budget with yellow hair, isn't it?"

"They were engaged in six weeks. There was the parsonage standing ready, and naturally they were all for getting married straight off. And do you know, if I hadn't pointed it out, that girl would never have seen that the same trousseau wasn't right for marrying a minister as for marrying Solly Simkins."

"First off, she wouldn't believe me, either. Then she said anyhow it had got to do, because she couldn't afford another. 'Of course not,' said I. 'And 'twouldn't look well for a minister's wife to appear extravagant, anyway. All you need is to tone things down a mite an' there—and especially that pink China silk.'"

"But, Miss Aurilla, that's the prettiest of all!" said she, half-crying. She was a
