The Reward of Industry

Written for The Western Home Monthly by William Lutton

Mr. A. W. Smithers, the chairman of the Board of Directors of the Grand Trunk, said at the recent meeting of the company, held in London, that the total amount which the forthcoming crop of all kinds would bring in to the farmer would be $600,000,000. That is to say, for wheat and mixed farming, and stock raising and every form of produce from the soil. Singularly enough, a C.P.R. official, resident in Winnipeg, had figured out for the writer, months before the prediction of Mr. Smithers, a total which came within a few dollars of the estimate made by the Grand Trunk chairman.

All this is conditioned, of course, upon the continuance of good weather.

What will this mean to the North West? There are things in the individual and national life which money cannot buy; but, with a bumper crop and good prices the West is saved—in many ways. Suspended activities will be resumed. The farmer will pay his debts and the merchant will be able to pay the big wholesale house which has carried him. Extensions to the home, to the barns, to the farm which the farmer contemplated, but could not afford, will be realized. City building will be resumed. The empty retail store, will be filled with customers. The individual will have money in his pocket. The whole tone of life will be braced up. A certain inertia which it was difficult to escape will disappear. There will be an eagerness and vivacity; and happiness will be, measurably determined by the number of pieces of paper, of a certain denomination which the average citizen has in his pocket. Unemployment will largely disappear. Men who have been hanging about our towns and cities will disappear on the farm, the factory, the new building.

The West had been keyed up tensely—unhealthily, if you liken the eagerness, the ambition, the planning and scheming was unwholesome, and it could not last. It was against the law of economics, which never tires saying: "This world is constructed on the principle that you can never get something for nothing."

With the crop realizing, measurably, at any rate, the hopes formed of it the West will get back to normal living. We do not call the frenzied real estate boom normal. That was a delirium, which could not last. The acreage has been extended; intensive farming has been applied to the land which was partially neglected; and the yield will be 30 per cent. beyond that of previous years. All this is related to comfort and contentment and courage and determination.

The varying meteorological conditions which prevail over vast areas must always be of concern to those who are interested in the productivity of the soil; but while there have been poor crops, absolute failure has not been stamped upon them at any time.

The material considerations involved in the vast sum of $600,000,000 are many and important. They are related to decent living, to contentment, to human aspiration and ambition. They are concerned with the dignity and proprieties of life. They are interwoven with every interest which affects the individual or the community. And so hard is it to dissociate mind from matter, that it might be truly said that the big "wad" has its spiritual relations as well as its instant material appeal.

But above and beyond the infinite betterment of the material situation, which which would be secured by a bumper crop, under circumstances which make this peculiarly desirable, is the psychology of the case. This money, distributed over wide areas, will mean individual betterment along material lines; but these, in turn, offer psychological concomitants.

The things the farmer, the storekeeper, the big merchant, the manufacturer, can do with this money have reactive effects upon spiritual impulses and stimuli.

A new carpet on the bare floor is psychological in its reactive effects. One might doubt whether salvation could be secured by subscribing to a formula of man's devising. There is no hesitancy as to the redemptive effect of a bit of carpet on the floor, or curtains on the windows, or flowers in the front or back yard. The deep spiritual significance of clothes need not be insisted on. During this time of stress, many people have denied themselves the clothes which they should have had for dignity and comfort. The ability to gratify this desire has uplifting effects. The new chair or sofa or picture, lends itself directly to spiritual exaltation, though the first effect is material gratification.

The farmer who pays off his debts is a new creature—upright, independent and happy. He who can enlarge his barns or add to his stock feels the effects in the spiritual part of him, though he could not give a name to that sense of exaltation that comes to him through enlarged possession.

The merchant, the manufacturer, the municipality, in its official capacity,—all are favorably affected by this promised "wad." It is not so much the things that are needed as the promise which this money will offer—a promise of security and comfort and independence. It will deepen the desire for home-making. It will settle many who have been restless. It will give that sense of permanency without which one is only staying. It will create a new-born pride in environment. It will give encouragement to the several municipalities which have been set back a little with respect to their plans of enlargement. It will rebuke all transitory persons who have not found rest for the sole of their feet. It will give the determination to make the most of the soil, as increased productivity guarantees enlarged income.

The outward things the money can buy; but outward things of themselves never spell content. The realization of the promise in regard to the crop, will produce the sense of rural and civic pride; and give to each individual the satisfied feeling of ownership. This great country, with its possibilities, is ours. Here we breathe the free air of heaven,—happy and content, not slothfully content, but ever going forward, conquering the untitled earth; conquering also, that is, winning, a fine idealism in an environment which, while it offers every material need and advantage, is friendly to the spiritual in conditions which make it easy for the spiritual to find expression.

British Work and British Workmen

The Editor, The Western Home Monthly

Speaking in the British House of Commons Winston Churchill upon a notable occasion said:

"It is my duty in this House to speak for the navy, and the truth is that it is sound as a bell all through. I do not care where or how it may be tested; it will be found good and fit and keen and honest. It will be found to be the product of good management and organization, and sound principle in design and strategy, of sterling workmen and faithful workmanship, and careful clerks and accountants and skilful engineers and painstaking officers and hardy tars." Thank God for this utterance and what it implies! Let it be written in letters of living fire on the conscience of the Canadian people. This is the race from which we sprang! These are the ideals they cherish—the things they strive after and consider worth while.

Judged by these standards, how have we fallen short? At this time of supreme peril, when the things we count dearer than life itself, are jeopardized, and the very existence of the British people is trembling in the balance, many Canadians have proved themselves unworthy of confidence and of trust. Some of our war contracts are a disgrace and a shame to a self-respecting people.

The political disclosures in high places make us sick at heart. Nor is the tale all told. Through it all, and behind it all, there looms in the background the skulking shadow of wrong doing that as yet has not been brought into the full light of day because too skilfully covered up. Political corruption stalks unabashed throughout this fair land undermining our whole social fabric. The remedy is with the people.

Hugh Mackay, M.D.
