THE MANTLE OF ELIJAH.

BY ISRAEL ZANGWILL. "The Master" was a forceful book, and placed Zangwill in the front rank, but this new novel is written on lines somewhat different from any of his former works. The heroine is the daughter of an English statesman, a very charming girl, who develops later into a woman of remarkable fascination, and possessed of high aims and ideals. The style is vigorous; the story is full of dramatic power and climacteric effect. Zangwill's energy and vigor is found in every page. Cloth, $1.50. Paper, 75c.

STRINGTOWN ON THE PIKE.

BY JOHN URI LLOYD. This strong story, by the author of "Etidorhpa," which went through ten or twelve editions of as many thousand copies each, ran as the serial in The Bookman during 1900. The scene is in Kentucky, and the characters are well defined and distinctly wrought out. The Red Haired Boy, Old Cupe, the Judge, the Colonel, etc., are so clear-cut that one feels that they are drawn true to life. Cupe, proud, kindly, dignified, certainly dominates the story, as does his fateful spell. He thrills its situations and crowns its actions in the climax of the novel. Cloth, $1.25. Paper, 75c.

SONS OF THE MORNING.

BY EDEN PHILLPOTTS. In "Children of the Mist," Mr. Phillpotts has made himself the natural successor of R. D. Blackmore, the famous author of "Lorna Doone." Paper, 75c. Cloth, $1.50.

The Literary World.—"As for his rustics, they are admirable. The book is a granary of shrewd sayings. Many a time we laughed, loud and long."

The Gentlewoman says:—"Eden Phillpotts is a story-writer who may rank with Hardy, or even with George Eliot."
