A DOMESTIC COMEDY.

THE VARIED RESULTS OF REARRANG-ING THE FURNITURE.

Mrs. Blank's Mania For Changing the Appearance of the Rooms Brought Trouble to the Male Contingent and Sorrow to Herself.

"Do you change the position of the furniture when you clean a room?" inquired housewife No. 1 of a friend in the course of a heart to heart talk. "Do I? Why, yes, indeed! I don't feel as if the room is cleaned unless I change the furniture a little bit. Do

"Well, I usually change the ornaments around and so forth, but in the spring and fall I like to change everything in a room-completely alter the whole appearance of it. Then I fancy the things are all new, and they seem to look prettler somehow. But, do you know, my husband doesn't like it at

"Neither does mine! Isn't that singular? Men are so peculiar!"

"Yes, indeed they are!" So many housekeepers share the views of these two that a story with a moral will not be out of place.

It was the other night only that Mr. Blank went unsuspiciously up stairs to bed at an unusually early hour, leaving his wife reading in the sitting room. He had a headache and carried a goblet of water in his right hand. Fearlessly advancing into the dark bedroom Mr. Blank suddenly felt both legs violently cut from under him. He clutched wildly at the air and said several things of an exclamatory nature, but there was nothing to save him. He went down.

"Good gracious, Henry!" ejaculated Mrs. Blank, hurrying to the scene of disaster. "What is the matter? Where are you? Why don't you light the gas?" Suiting the action to the word, she beheld her husband sprawling across the bed; the glass he had carried had discharged its contents across the pillowshams and shivered on

Mr. Blank did the talking for the next ten minutes. He said that of all the blankety blank folly of which the mind could conceive this of changing furniture around was the worst. He said it was a pretty thing for a man to walk into his own room and have to fall over things in the dark. He said he wouldn't stand it; the furniture must be replaced where it formerly

"I shan't do anything of the kind." replied Mrs. Blank. "It looks very much -nicer where it is. Why don't you feel where you are going when you get into a dark room?"

"S'pose you'd like me to crawl in on all fours!" snarled Mr. Blank. "I couldn't feel where the bed was unless I happened to touch the footboard. I thought I could walk clear over to the bureau. I tell you it's a confounded crank you have on this subject. Some day you'll precipitate a serious acci-

"If any one precipitates, it'll be you, should think," retorted Mrs. Blank icily. And the furniture remained where it was.

It was the next evening that Master Blank undertook to carry a pile of schoolbooks from the dining room to the sitting room. He had a bottle of ink in his hand, and he thought he knew exactly where the center table was. In the course of his peregrinations in search of it, however, he came into violent collision with the glass door of the bookcase, which he broke. There were also inky traces discernible on the carpet when Mrs. Blank came in. This time there was some balm for her feelings. She could spank Master Blank and did it with the best will in the world.

Her own downfall was not long in coming, Lowever, although for a few ! days only minor inconveniences were met with, such as the abrasion of ankles against chair rockers and slight bruises received by means of sudden contact with unforeseen obstacles: Last evening Mrs. Blank undertook to transfer the cage of her pet parrot from the window where it spends the day to the snug corner where it passes the night. She did not trouble to light the gas, and by some unaccountable mental lapse she had forgotten the precise point at which a tabouret, on which stood a jardipiere, was stationed. She charged into the tabouret with considerable force, was overbalanced by the weight of the cage in her arms and took a header with a resounding crash. The parrot shricked, and, unable to distinguish friend from foe, inflicted a severe bite on her mistress' finger. Mr. Blank came in hurriedly, picked up his wife and assisted in making an inventory of sundry contusions. Then they lifted the parrot cage, badly bent, and the jardiniere with a piece chipped out of it and the tabouret somewhat scratched, and then Mr. Blank observed quiet-"I have just one thing to ask you, Mrs. Blank. Was I right?" "No, you were not!" retorted Mrs.

Blank savagely, "Serious accident? What's serious about this, I should like to know? For goodness' sake, Henry, don't stand there trying to look like a martyr! If you must have the furniture moved back, I'll move it!" And Prececupation. "Why do you speak so slightingly of that eminent scientist?"

"I didn't mean to speak slightingly of him," answered the young man with the striped shirt front, "but it does seem peculiar to me that a man who knows just when the next comet will arrive and just how far it is to the moon should be so utterly ignorant when it comes to a question of when it's time for dinner or what train to take to get to the nearest town."-Bos-

Why Catarrh is Fatal

Because it pours a flood of poisons into the circulation that saps diges tion and strength so materially as to render the body incapable of resisting disease, and consumption is the sult. Catarrh is quickly cured by Catarrhozone, a fragrant, germ destroying vapor that goes to the root of the disease. It sooths and heals the inflamed mucous surfaces, clears the head and throat, and positively never fails to perfectly cure Bronchitis, Catarrh or Asthma. Nothing is so good for diseases of the respiratory organs as Catarrhozone. Large outfit $1. Small size 25c. Druggists or by mail from Polson & Co., Kingston, Ont.

ONE GAME OF POKER

IT WAS ALL HE CARED TO PLAY IN THAT COMPANY.

Re Was Bucking a Prince of Wales, a Rothschild, a Duchess of Marlborough and Minister Schenck, and There Was No Limit.

The following story, which involved King Edward VII. when he was yet Prince of Wales, was related to my father by a prominent Washington lawyer, since deceased, who, during a business visit to London in the early seventies, called on Minister Schenck, who at that time represented this country at the court of St. James and with whom he had been well acquainted in America, says a writer in the Chicago Herald. Given in his own words the story runs as follows: "'By the way,' said Schenck, as we were about to separate one morning, 'what are you going to do this afternoon?" "'Nothing of moment,' I replied. 'No programme in particular.' There is going to be a poker game at the Langham, said Schenck, and if you care for the exercise I'd like to have you The Prince of Wales will be one of the party.

"This last rather dazzled me. I reflected that it isn't given every American citizen to bluff and raise and draw cards against a prince born in the purple. I would go. I cared not a whit for poker, but it would be an experience whereof to tell the babes when they grew up—tell them how papa beat the Prince of Wales. I told Schenck I'd be there. He seemed delighted and no doubt was, for he was a royal good fellow and liked to put his friends in the way to be pleased. One thing I forgot, the limit. But I had a couple of thousand dollars in London and felt elegantly safe, even superciliously so. "Three o'clock came, and I repaired to the Langham. The others came in later. In addition to the Prince of Wales came also Anselm Rothschild of the bank of that name and the Duchess of Mari-borough. I'll say right here that the lady was the best player of the lot. With these three Schenck and I sat down. Just after I was presented to the prince I asked Schenck in a whisper what limit usually obtained at these poker festivals. He replied, also in a strong aside, that there was no limit.

"'The prince never plays with a limit,' whispered Schenck. 'It would infringe his dignity as a prince.'
"I felt a bit cold after this. My $2,000 blinking in the Bank of England vault with its yellow neighbors didn't seem such a wad of money. In fact, it began to diminish and appear paltry and mean when made to face the proposition of limitless play against England's heir apparent with the whole island to draw on, to say nothing of the Rothschilds. It started the perspiration, but I was in and couldn't get out. I hastily made up my mind to stay long enough to lose $100 or so and then grow suddenly ill and extricate myself. It was a happy thought, 'Cold feet' would pull me out if my losses became too lowering.

"As we sat down, however, two things happened to disturb my dream of 'cold feet' as a means of escape. Schenck was to bank the game, and the first thing the prince said was, 'Give me £1,000 worth of chips'-$5,000. And he said it with no more of notice or emphasis than if he had said, 'Pass the pie.' "I began to realize that I was liable to feet' could come to the rescue. To add to my grief the heir of the Rothschilds placed a book made up of signed checks by his elbow, with a blank space for him to write in the amount. This he did with a blue pencil of the editorial brand. The Rothschild didn't buy chips. He played in these checks. No wonder I began to swent-to be caught between the bank-ing house of the Rothschilds and the British empire with only $2,000! The one ray of encouragement in it all was that the duchess—fine old lady, too-only bought $1,000 worth of chips. I steered by that and, although groaning inwardly, bought $1,000 worth of chips also. Schenck smiled approvingly. I learned afterward that I did right. It would not have been etiquette to buy as much as the prince. I was glad of that. I would have been in a pretty fix if etiquette had taken the other shoot.

Well, it's hardly worth while to go into the details of the game. The ante was £10, four call ten. I got good enough hands, but was scared to death. I didn't dare bet them. The prince would look at his cards in a royal ermined way and "The young Rothschild would look at his cards and observe, with the same indifference to my feelings which distinguished the prince, 'I'll see that and go 150 better.' These blood curdling remarks took place before the draw, mind you. And then they'd lean back and call for what cards they wanted and organized to bet £2,000 to £3,000—anything that happened to pass into their reckless minds. That's the sort of company I'd got into. I laid down hand after hand and stayed out all I could, but for all my dodging I lost $1,200 in the first fortyfive minutes—simply anted it away.

"About the end of the first hour I got three aces. They were all that saved me too. I broke into a plethoric jackpot with them, which the prince and the Rothschild immediately raised several times, as if for exercise. In the end I won it. It swelled my fortune over $10,000. After that I maneuvered very cautiously and quit at 6 p. m. about $300 behind "That ended my dash, as it were, into the royal family. I never passed a more miserable afternoon in my life. Schenck and the duchess played along with much calmness and phiegm, but I was so oppressed by my danger and harassed by the reckless betting of the prince and the Rothschild that I have no recollection as to how they fared. Schenck asked me to other poker parties, but I had a previous engagement each time. Games without limits against players equally unbounded are too many for me."

RICHARD BOYLE.

Man Known to History as "The Great

Richard Boyle, known to history as "The Great Earl of Cork," born a commoner at Canterbury, October 3, 1566. Having lost his at Canterbury, parents and being unable to prosecute his studies on the slender come accruing to a Clerkship in the Court of Exchequer, he went to Ireland in search of a fortune. Here he married a lady who, presently dying, left him an estate worth £500 a year and a position of influence which, as he employed it, soon raised against him a host of enemies and detractors. The reb of Munster reduced him again to poverty, but he had gained the favor of Queen Elizabeth in the meantime and judicious investment in Irish lands, which he peopled with Protestant tenants, made him not only rich but a political figure of great importance in the troublous that were to follow. His titles came from James I. and Charles I., to the latter of whom he gave splendid return in his services when the great rebellion broke out in Ireland. Lismore, his principal seat, was turned into a fortress, his servants and tenants were armed and disciplined at his own expense in the royalist cause, and when all else failed his plate was melted into coin and placed at his master's disposal. Cromwell's significant compliment that "had there been an Earl of Cork in each county there would have been no rebellion" is perhaps the best evidence producible as to the important role filled by Boyle in the politics of his day.

The following story was evidently not told to illustrate ministerial dignity; but as an amusing anecdote of a great man who loved children, and shared their fun, it could hardly remain untold.

E. K. Cressey, of Brooklyn Hills, L. I., says that one day, when he was a small boy, his mother left the house, cautioning him and his brothers to be quiet and not romp while she was gone.

There was a hair brush with which Mrs. Cressey was wont to punish violations of the domestic statutes when any such occurred, and the youngsters promised to be good. Presently Mr. Beecher arrived to make a call upon the Cresseys, and found no one to receive him but demure looking boys. A flash of anticipation came into his eyes as he joyously told his young hosts to prepare for the romp of their lives. "But mamma told us we mustn't romp," protested the future doctor of philosophy. "I'll take all the responsibility," eplied the preacher. When Mrs. Cressey neared the nouse on her return she heard indications of a small riot. Filled with indignation at this unheard-of re-bellion in her little republic, she rushed into the house, with words of rebuke trembling on her tongue. At the door she paused, petrified. Henry Ward Beecher was flat on his back on the floor, with a parcel of young Indians apparently dancing a ghost dance on his prostrate form and emitting shrill yells. The spirit of the avenger immediately into silent consternation all the rebels except the arch insurgent Climbing to his feet, the unabashed clergyman said:

"Mrs. Cressey, I promised my friends here to take all the responsibility for this outbreak, and (there he reached the hair brush and presented it to her with a Chesterfieldian bow) "I am ready to take whatever is due them. You may begin at once."

But for once there was an infraction of the laws in the Cressey household that was unpunished. Mr. Beecher went unspanked.

A Fatal Answer.

His client, "Hat" Wheelock, had got into a quarrel with one "Pat" McDonald over a horse trade. The quarrel had gone so far that McDonald had made application to a magistrate to have Wheelock bound over to keep the peace, alleging that he had threatened to do him bodily injury.

When the case was called, McDonald testified to the circumstances under which Wheelock had threatened him. The cross-examination began. "Now, Mr. McDonald," the lawyer said, "you declare that you are under the fear of bodily harm?"

"You are even afraid for your life?"

"I am, sorr." "Then you freely admit that Hat Wheelock can whip you, Pat McDonald?' The question roused McDonald's "Irish" instantly.

he shouted. "I kin whip him, and anny half-dozen like him!" "That will do, Mr. McDonald," said the attorney. The court was already in a roar, and the lawyer rested the case without further testi-mony or argument. The case was disnissed, for it was evident that Pat could not be under serious bodily fear of a man whom, in his own opinion, he had only to use one sev-
