Questions and Answers.

Miscellaneous.

Calf Meal.

I would like to mix my own calf meal.
I have plenty of flax. What is the best mixture of grain to add to it, and what is the best way to prepare it? T. J. C.

Ans.—A very good calf meal can be made by grinding one part flax to two parts wheat, or using one part flax to two parts sifted oats. This feed should be mixed to a paste in cold water and then scalded before being fed.

Draining Muck Soil.

Is there any danger from laying cement tile in black muck? Will water draw any distance in black muck? What is the best way to keep quicksand out of the tile? W. H. W.

Ans.—We have not heard of black muck having a detrimental effect on the concrete tile. As a rule, tile must be laid quite closely together in order to properly drain a muck soil. It does not seem to draw as far as in some other kinds of soil. The only remedy is to put in plenty of tile. It is rather difficult to lay tile in quicksand. Using straw or loam soil beneath and over the top is one way of preventing the sand from getting into the tile.

Planting Willows.

When planting willows, how big should the branch be to get the quickest growth?
What is the best month in which to plant?
Would cutting the limbs and letting them lie in water before planting be a good plan? What other trees grow quickly?
Should manure be put at the roots of the trees when planted? J. B.

Ans.—The small limb, possibly 2 feet in length, would give as quick growth as a larger limb. April or May is the best time to plant. The limbs may be placed in water until small, fibrous roots appear. The catalpa is a quick-growing tree. It is well to have fairly rich soil at the tree roots. The manure may be mixed with the soil, but it is not advisable to have the manure come in direct contact with the roots.

Building a House.

1. Which is preferable for a farm house, ordinary clay brick or the new colored cement brick?

2. A farmer building a new house wishes to make provision for installing waterworks and electric light at a later date. Where could he get a variety of plans for a house of this nature? What heating system would you advise? W. L. B.

Ans.—1. Both clay and cement brick have given good results. Some claim that the concrete bricks are a little colder than the others.

2. Books giving a large number of house plans are advertised by some firms.
We might mention Keith's Building Magazine. Hot-air or hot-water heating can be used on the farm. The hot water is a little more expensive, but it gives a nice heat and is generally considered cleaner than the hot-air system.

Fulfilling An Agreement.

I put a watering system into my stables. I got quotations from a pump dealer in town, and he told me the general agent for the company would be along in a few days, and he would take him to my place. They figured up the amount of piping necessary and gave me a quotation which was considerably cheaper than what I had previously had.
I signed an order, received the material and paid for it. Later I found out that I had not secured what I thought I was getting, as the pump, cylinder, etc., were not what I thought I had signed for.
The writing of the general agent was such that I could not read it. Can I make the general agent or company give me a square deal, when I have the local agent as witness that I did not get the kind of pump and cylinder I thought I would?
S. H.

Ans.—It is doubtful if you have any case against either the general agent or the company. You made the mistake that many others have done, that is of signing an order without reading it and being satisfied that the order stated exactly what you wanted.
