NEW TO THE GROCER.

A Swindle With a Ten-dollar Bill Practis by a Fluent Young Man. The grocer sat on a high stool, his elbows on the counter and his face buried in his hands. The Brooklyn man came in to get a quarter's worth of eggs. "Hello," he said, "what's the matter

"I'm thinking," said the grocer,
"that the man who said that all the fools are not dead knew precisely what he was talking about."

"How could you think otherwise?" remarked the Brooklyn man, with true Brooklyn humor. "with all the customers you have?"

"Hold on," said the grocer, "this is no joke. Let me tell you about it. A little while ago I was sitting here doing nothing in particular, when in rushed a very pleasant looking young man. He had a lot of bills in his hand, and he wanted to know if I could let him have a ten-dollar bill for small bills. He said that he wanted to send $10 away in a letter, and didn't like to put small bills in an envelope. Well, I'm a pretty goodnatured sore of a man and I told him that I would be very glad to oblige him. So, while I went into the drawer to get the bill, he counted out $10 so that I could hear him, and then fished out an envelope into which he placed the bill that I gave him. Then he started out of the store. He didn't seem in a great hurry, and so when, in counting over the money that he had given me, I found that there was only $9. I didn't have any suspicions of intentional wrong-doing on his part, but credited the matter to a very natural mistake.

"Well, I called him back, and he was very apologetic; said it was a cur-fous mistake for him, and a few other things that I don't remember. As a matter of fact he talked so fast and so smoothly that half of what he said escaped me in my admiration for his cratorical powers. While he was talking he was fishing around in his pockets for an odd dollar. Apparently he couldn't find one, for he finally said:
"Well, I guess I'll have to give you your bill back until I can get that other dollar." Then he looked at the en-velope in his band and continued: "Gee! that's too Bad. I've gone and sealed that envelope up and it's ad-dressed and stamped and your ten-dollar bill is inside. I'll tell you what we might do, though, he went on, after a moment's thought "You give me my nine small bills, and I'll go out and get the other bill. In the mean time you hold on to this envelope and when I come back I'll give you the entire $10 and we won't have to open up my letter at all.

"Well, I swear I couldn't see any harm in this arrangement, and I said 'yes,' without a moment's hesitation. What makes me so darn mad now is that I was excessively polite to the duck. Why, I fairly bowed him out of the store, and after he had gone I carefully placed the envelope in my cash drawer and locked it up Then I waited for fully half an hour for the young man to come back, and when he failed to show up I took the envelope out and ripped it open, not with any idea in my head that anything was wrong, but simply because I was impatient with the man for being so inconsiderate after I had done him a favor. Well, there was a nestly folded it was written in a neat hand: 'I'll be back when the robins nest again.' "Say, even then it was a full minute before the truth dawned on me. When it did hit me it came like a ton of brick. 'Oh, you gosh dured fool,' I murmured; and then I came around on this stool and sat down to think. I was still thinking when you came in, and I'll start in again when you go

"Up in Reubenville, where I lived before I came to Brooklyn," said the Brooklyn man, "we used to call that flim flam.

"Oh, you did, eh." said the grown, well, I don't know what they call it in Brooklyn, but it's a good game and when I go broke in the grocery business I'm going to try it on some guy myself," and the grocer went back o his thoughts, while his friend walked out.

"Near our camp by the river was a hut occupied by a typical Honduranian family, consisting of husband and wife, grandfather and grandmother, and a dozen or so assorted children. The only one of the crowd who did anything except rest and smoke was the wife. At intervals of perhaps a week she would saily out with the family tinpan, erstwhile used for cooking, and proceed to an old placer digging on the river bank. There she would squat, throw a few gourds full of dirt into the pan, fill it with water and begin the usual circular potten of gold washing. She was very skillful and would keep a little sheet of dirty water spraying over the edge like a miniature cataract. When the water was exhausted a few spoonfuls of sand would be left in the bottom of the pan, and, spreading it out thin, with a bit of stick, she would go over it grain for grain, looking for 'color.' Whenever she saw a speck of gold, she moistened the stick on her tongue and picked up the particle by adhersion. Each bit of the precious metal was stored away in a quill, plugged with clay at the ends, and I have known her to take out as much as a quarter of an ounce in the course of one day. Usually her limit was about $2, and when she got that she stopped. Then the head of the house would arise languidly and start for the nearest store tweive miles away. Some-times he would trade the whole amount for whiskey, but as a rule be brought back tobacco, salt, metal or "There are tundred of native famil-There are fundred of native families who live in exactly that tranner in Olancho. Kalamazoo, April 21. - A report comes from Oshtemo township, four miles west of here, to the effect that, a young farmer, named Lemuel Hindes, while at work in his field yesterday, was attacked by a large flock of crows and frightfully injured. Hindes was distributing a wagon load of fertilizer over the field and before he had warning a flock of apparently a thousand or more flew into His attempts to drive them away with a pitchfork were futile and they attacked him viciously. He killed quite a number. but the remainder of the flock pecked his lace and neck in a terrible manner. His lace and neck in a terrible manner. His cries attracted his wife, who come to his rescue with a shotgun and with which she killed a sobre or more, the remainder flying away with loud cries. Mr. Hindes injuries are not believed to be serious, though painful.
