The bridegroom's gift to the bride was a sunburst of pearls, to the bridesmaid an onal ring, and to the best man a jewelled stickpin.

Over fifty guests sat down to the wedding feast, and after this sumptuous spread had been disposed of the company's spent a very enjoyable social evening, breaking up at a late hour. The happy coupie left Harwich for Fletcher on the following day, where Mr. McFadden has built a fine brick residence in which to commence his married life.

The bride is a sister of Mrs. Owen Crow, Emma street, Chatham.

Tallway took the fare and counted it, and then, carefully, he put part of it in his coat pocket, and the rest in the hip pocket of his pantaloons.

"Why," said the passenger, "do you divide the money in that way?"

and cultured a statesman and pulpiteer undertakes to administer such "premeditated and deliberate" chastisement, his poor victim can only offer heartfelt thanks that he doesn't use his compound interest calculations on his language.

It would be unnecessary for me to say that the good doctor is right—he always is. What a deficient memory and treacherous note-book in must have had throughout that whole interview! For it is, no doubt, now absolutely clear that the doubt, now absolutely clear that the doctor's entire conversation—both the portion he characterized as con-fidential, and the portion he per-mitted me to record—was devoted to earnest, eloquent eulogy of Mr. Stan-worth, Mr. Pike, Dr. Hall and several other dear friends to whom he-alluded so affectionately and so-loyally.

Ah, sir, we humble and unfortunate-
