

THE ACADIAN

WOLFVILLE, N. S., JAN. 12, 1894.

Mr. Estlin in his Tuesday's issue says that the statement made by a correspondent in last week's ACADIAN that the Acadian Orphanist has appropriated the name of this paper is not true.

Meeting of Council. An adjourned meeting of the town council was held on Wednesday evening in their new quarters in the old school building, which will in future be known as the town hall.

CORRESPONDENCE.

To the Editor of the ACADIAN. Mr. Editor, - Two questions of interest to the people of this town are herewith sent you, in the hope you, or some of your correspondents, may be able to answer them.

1. - How many telephone instruments are in use by town officials, for town business and paid for out of the town funds, of Wolfville? 2. - Is it a proper thing or compatible with the office of mayor or town councillor, to be connected with the Electric Light Company, the Telephone Company, or any other company whose business depends largely upon the action or attitude of the council towards such companies?

A Citizen.

To the Editor of the ACADIAN. The Western Chronicle tells its readers that poor Jack McGinty is dead, but does not state what caused his death.

The facts are as follows: The day after the big snow storm Jack was walking on the railway. A special express from Ottawa with an official of the patent office on board bringing important papers in connection with that big libel case, came up behind him and the snow plow struck poor Jack on the head and buried him about twenty feet into a snow drift. They picked him up and brought him in the house and got the doctor, but as soon as he saw Jack he said the wound was fatal, he never knew anyone to recover who had been struck by that snow plow. Jack's mother was away from home and did not get back to see her poor boy alive. He lived only an hour, suffering intensely. He was conscious to the last and seemed to be very happy. The last words I heard him whisper were: 'Dear Auntie, tell the doctor to look out for that snow plow.' His mother is going to bring a suit against the railway company for big damages, and has retained that well known law firm Ross & Co. to do the work for her, JACK MCGINTY'S AUNT.

"Our First Visit Now Our Last, D. V."

The general scope of that excellent periodical of fashion, "Toilettes" is broad and practical. Its publishers make it their aim to include among its contents examples of every kind of costumes for ordinary wear as well as for special functions. A cursory examination of a few numbers reveals designs for baby and juvenile garments, misses costumes, wedding, morning, ball and evening dresses, sleeves, waists, trimmings, collarettes, etc., as varied as they are refined. It is the best and most useful magazine of the kind ever published, its price bringing it within reach of everybody. The February number furnishes models for model fancy ball dresses, and can be obtained from all News dealers, or direct from Toilettes Publishing Co., 126 West 23rd St., New York. Single copies 15 cents. Yearly subscriptions $1.50.

FOR SALE LOW BY BROWN, MUNRO & CO. Wolfville, Dec. 29th, 1893.

New Year's in Brooklyn, N. Y. DEAR ACADIAN, - It has been a long time since I made bold to send you a few lines; however I am now about to do so and if this finds favor in your sight well and good---if not as usual when N. G. and east it is the fumes. Perhaps some of your readers have spent New Year's in Brooklyn, yet I feel convinced a large number have not. But to start with I will wish you all a very happy New Year.

Sunday morning, the 31st of December, 1893, I awoke to the fact that I had a very bad cold in my eyes, and would therefore have to be rather careful of my pupils during the day. However I was a good boy, and went to church and Sunday school, as usual, and also visited a sick friend who happens to be laid up in the Long Island Hospital. While there I met a Nova Scotian, a sea captain, who lives in the western part of Kings Co. I enjoyed a pleasant conversation with him, and found out there was no one equal to the Nova Scotian for the Nova Scotian to converse with. We talked over old times, and had no trouble to do so. I also found him to be a good christian, a thing you seldom find among seafaring men.

When I got home, I found I would have to remain in at night on account of my eyes, but I was determined to watch the old year out, and see the new one in and not lose any sleep in doing so. Of course you wonder how I did it, or else come to the conclusion I am in the habit of sitting up late, and therefore did not mind it. For once you are wrong, I am happy to say, for I generally plan to be in bed quite early, so to bed I went at half past nine, but before doing so I set my alarm to ring at 11.30 p. m., which it did, it seemed to me a very short time. But if it had not done so I would have sprung out of bed a half hour later, to find out what was the matter for all the blowing of whistles, ringing of bells, the firing of guns, pistols and all kinds of firearms, I heard, one would think a great battle was being fought. I thought a fearful cyclone was coming, and all the steamers in the harbor were making ready to sail, in order to escape the effect. It sounded as if every factory in the city had put on steam, just for the sake of blowing its whistle. I knew they were not working over time, under such trying circumstances as we are now experiencing. The elevated trains also took it up and blew their whistles as hard as the rest; while the boys in the street helped it on with their tin horns and kettle drums. And here I was at the hour of midnight, laboring under a delusion, as to what it was all about, when all of a sudden it struck me it was New Year's day, and all this noise was to hurry the old year out, and welcome the new one in. After thanking my Maker for bringing me over the journey of life for another year, and asking strength for the one on which I had entered, and the noise in the street had ceased, I again sought my bed and slept until the sun was high in the heavens; and thus I saw the old year out and the new year in without the loss of sleep.

The day was beautiful, almost too warm for a winter's day, but none complained. This being the one day in the year that gentlemen (with the exception of ministers) are allowed to call, I decided to call on a few old friends that I had not seen for some time. I soon had a few cards written, and was out in a very quiet New Year's, quieter even than in our little town of Wolfville, for there you hear the jangle of sleigh bells, mingling with the happy songs of the country lass, as she and her lover sit close together, under the warm buffalo robes, from which they bid defiance to the frosty air. Often in winter, as I have listened to rumble and jumble of the whirling city, have I longed to go down the old hill on my sled, as I used to do in days gone by. Often in imagination have I heard the cry---out of the way---clear the track---ring out on the frosty air; add the tears that have filled my eyes as it has proved to be naught but an imagination, and I always find myself right here in Brooklyn, when I awake from my reverie. I spent the day as best I could, for after I finished my calls, I took tea and stayed the evening with a friend. New Year's was quiet, and times are hard, and the young man who lives in Wolfville, or any of the neighboring places, if he has a home, is fortunate if he has sense enough to stay there. Yet indeed he is better off than thousands who are next thing to starving in these crowded cities, who have neither work nor home.

Young man, I have proved it, there is no place like home. C. W. BASKIN, Brooklyn, N. Y., Jan. 4th, 1894.

The Review of Reviews for January is particularly strong in its editorial resume of the closing events of the stirring and turbulent year 1893. Dr. Albert Shaw, the editor, discusses tariff revision, the relief of the unemployed, recent strikes and labor questions, the Hawaiian question and the Administration's policy with regard to that subject, civil service reform as applied to our diplomatic and consular as well as other branches of the public service, and a great variety of other topics of the day. Foreign affairs are briefly but clearly presented, and this department, entitled "The Progress of the World," presents in some twenty pages a broad and frank treatment of affairs political and social from Canada to Capetown. Among the portraits interspersed are those of Hon. W. L. Wilson, who gives his name to the new tariff bill; Miss Clara Barton, the American head of the Red Cross Society; Mr. T. V. Powderly, formerly Master Workman; the late Sir Robert Morier, British Ambassador to St. Petersburg; the late Prince Alexander of Bulgaria; Major Gould-Adams, Dr. Jameson and Col. Carrington, leaders in the campaign against Lobengula; Osmic-Perier, the new Prime Minister of France; Signor Crispi, Prime Minister of Italy; Mr. Emil Frey, the new President of Switzerland; Hon. Mackenzie Bowell, Canadian Minister of Commerce; Hon. H. M. Nelson, new Premier of Queensland, and the late John Tyndall, the eminent scientist. This list is sufficiently illustrative of the enterprises of the Review of Reviews in securing and presenting each month the portraits of the men whose faces the reader of the world's news would most naturally prefer to see.
