Changed the Koreans.

Koreans were quick to quarrel in ancient days and won a bad reputation on this account. At one time, a historian explains, fatal quarrels became so frequent in the country that drastic measures were necessary. A law was promulgated ordering adult males to wear on all occasions a china headdress shaped like an inverted flowerpot. It was impossible to fight when crowned with this fragile gear, and the penalties for removing it were severe. The first offense entailed fifty blows on the soles of the feet, and the second meant decapitation. This decree had the most soothing effects, the nature of the inhabitants changed as if by magic, and Korea was called the Land of the Morning Calm.

fashion during the sporting season, purchased a fine dog at an equally fine price. The next day he set out shooting in the environs of Marly. A partridge rose, and Dumas fired, wounding it. It fell about 100 feet away. Away went the dog, but simply gave the bird the coup de grace. Dumas, enraged, took the ramrod of his gun to whip the dog. The dog took the ramrod between his teeth, rose on his hind legs and began to dance a polka. The famous author then perceived that the dog had not been trained to retrieve. His fame had been made in a circus. Disappointed, Dumas gave Fido to the first peasant he met.

Insulted

Duels have been fought over the most remotely fancied insults. M. Romieu, who seems to have been an editor in Paris, got a letter from a young lawyer which ran: "Sir, I send you with this note a ballad, which I beg you will read with great attention. If you think you can add a few words to it and they suit me I consent to accept you as a collaborateur." The manuscript was returned with a note thus: "Sir, I have read your ballad with the greatest attention. I leave to Know that "impossible," where truth and mercy and the everlasting voice of nature order, has no place in the brave man's dictionary; that when all men have said "impossible" and tumbled noisily elsewhither and thou alone art left, then first thy time and possibility have come.
