Don't neglect the eyes. Lost sight is irrevocable. A dentist can replace a lost tooth with an artificial one which may pass for the tooth of nature, but no oculist can restore the eye once sightless to its normal state. Save your eyes from being overtaxed by using spectacles to relieve and strengthen them. We can fit almost every eye with the lens required to aid the sight and spare its optic nerves. Parties in town or country can have their eyes tested at their own homes if sufficient notice is given us at our store.

Epps's Cocoa
BREAKFAST-SUPPER.
By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided for our breakfast a superior and healthful beverage which may save us many doctor's bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to seize upon our weakness. Epps's Cocoa is a most valuable and healthful food. It is a most valuable and healthful food. self-help

You are weak, "run-down," health is frail, strength gone. Doctors call your case an anemia—there is a fat-famine in your blood. Scott's Emulsion of cod-liver-oil, with hypophosphites, is the best food-means of getting your strength back—your doctor will tell you that.

He knows also that when the digestion is weak it is better to break up cod-liver oil out of the body than to burden your tired digestion with it. Scott's Emulsion does that.

Josephine Shaw Lowell contributes to the June number a thoughtful paper entitled "The True Aim of Charity Organization Societies," by which term she means, as she defines it, a society for organizing charity. The first organization of this character was started in London, England, in 1869; but the society soon found its way across the ocean, and there are at the present time one hundred and ten organizations of the kind in the United States. Mrs. Lowell divides the population of the world into two classes, not on the basis of poverty and riches, though, but of character and life. "The workers and the idlers," she says, "constitute the two classes into which human beings are divided. The workers are those who usually serve their fellow men; and they are workers whatever be their occupation, if this condition of useful service is complied with. They may spend all night making bread; they may lie for ten hours every day on their backs in the dark, hundreds of feet under ground, picking out coal; they may set type all night in a newspaper office; they may sew all day, or wait on table, or wash clothes, or cook, or run errands; they may plan railroads; they may superintend factories; they may write poems; they may sing, or act, or preach and teach—they are always workers, if what they do is of use to the world."

The Abbe Lemire, the eloquent deputy whose influence in the French Chamber was so lately robbed of their authority, has been made a canon. This title was conferred upon him about two months ago at the time of the Congress of Tarbes, and he has just been solemnly invested with the insignia of the canonate by the archbishop of Aix.

The Catholic press has met with a serious loss in the death of Marc du Tertre, former editor of the Observateur Français and of La Patrie. Known to his readers under the pseudonym of Musclé, Marc du Tertre was, not only the sympathizer of all who approached him, but also the esteem and admiration of his readers. His style, though often elaborate, was powerful, brilliant in coloring, striking in expression. His characterizations were his strong point. One can never forget his "De Man," for instance, which appeared in 1888. He had a singular facility for endowing every subject with intense vitality. He was a pupil of Valles and, in the Catholic press, the rival of Severin. He was still a young man, and leaves a widow and five children.

Still another advance for the Catholic faith in Norway may be seen in the ordination by Bishop Fallize, who has charge of Catholic interests in that part of the world, of the first Norwegian priests to obtain orders since the days of the so-called reformation. Bishop Fallize is a member of the Congregation of the Holy Cross, and he was attached to the houses of that order in this country before he was invested with the purple.

Rév. Patrick Wynne, who was ordained at Cincinnati on the 17th ult., and who came to Lowell, with the intention of singing High Mass in St. Patrick's Church there on Sunday 28th, was stricken with pneumonia and taken to St. John's hospital, where he died on the very day he expected to officiate in St. Patrick's Church. His funeral took place from that edifice on Tuesday 30th ult.

Sir Andrew Clark said: "I call perfect health the loveliest thing in this world, and alcohol even in small doses will take the bloom of, will injure the perfection of loveliness of health, both mental and moral; I go still further and say, alcohol is not only no helper of work, but a hinderer of work, and every man that comes to the front of a profession in London is marked by this characteristic, that the more busy he gets, the less in the shape of alcohol he takes, and his excuse is 'I am very sorry, but I can not take it and do my work.'"

Minister Dias, whose mediocrity caused his expulsion from Cuba, was a frequent speaker at the Protestant Sunday-School convention held in Boston a week or two ago. Of course he misrepresented and maligned the Cuban Catholics, but the main point of all his addresses lay in his assertion that the financial assistance which American Protestants gave him was very helpful, which, understood in the way he wished it to be, was simply an appeal for more funds.

The Atlantic monthly deserves the highest praise and credit for the efforts it is making, through the educational papers which have been prominent a feature of its pages for the past few months, to discover just how effective our public school system is and under what defects it labors most. The Review has already commented on the papers that have appeared in previous numbers of the Atlantic, and it now calls its readers' attention to the article in the current issue of that magazine, which is, perhaps, more significant and important than any of the preceding papers. This article consists of six letters written by public school teachers who are considered highly successful in their several schools, and who tell of the obstacles they encounter in their work, incidentally mentioning some of the deficiencies thereof that they were conscious themselves when they began teaching. All of these successful teachers admit that their training for a teacher's position was very inadequate, and they declare, furthermore, that the teachers who were chosen for the profession and secure places in the public schools, labor almost in all cases, under the same defect of imperfect training. the increase of leprosy in Iceland is beginning to assume alarming proportions and the question of building a spacious hospital for the reception and care of the lepers becomes more and more imperative. The Icelandic government has decided to send Dr. Bjornson to Bergen to study the treatment of the malady in the asylum there. The Danish Catholic mission in Copenhagen is about to send several Sisters of St. Joseph to Iceland to take care of the lepers. Father Sveinsson, the Icelandic Jesuit, preacher at St. Andrew's College in Ordrup, near Copenhagen, has collected in France more than 15,000 francs to be devoted to this same charitable work.

The recent reception by the Pope of 350 sailors and fifty officers of the British squadron lying at Civita Vecchia was an interesting and unique event. The arrangements for the reception were made by Mgr. Stonor and the Duke of Norfolk. On their arrival at the Vatican the sailors attended Mass in the Sistine chapel in the presence of the Pope. After the Mass the officers were presented to his Holiness, and on leaving the chapel the enthusiasm of the blue-jackets manifested itself in loud cheers for Leo XIII., to which he responded with repeated benedictions. A good dinner was served to the visitors, and the Vatican galleries and gardens were opened for them. In the afternoon they listened to a sermon by Canon Moye in the Church of S. Sylvester, and after being driven around the city and served with refreshments, they took the train for Civita Vecchia.

Woman's Work
In never done, and it is especially wearing and wearisome to those whose blood is impure and unfit properly to form, sustain, and renew the wearing of service and tissue. It is more because of this condition of the blood that women are run down.

Tired, Weak, Nervous,
Then because of the work itself. Every physician agrees, and that the only remedy is in building up by taking a good nerve tonic, blood purifier and vitalizer like Hood's Sarsaparilla. For the treatment of Women of all ages of nervous, climatic or ill, or resulting from hard work, overwork, and impure blood, thousands have found relief and cure in Hood's Sarsaparilla.
