The Die is Cast For Better or Worse.

CHAPTER XXIII.
Startling Intelligence.

He found Forbes and dragged him into the room, and poured out the story. Forbes was moved to tears—tears of pity for his old master, and joy over his young one; but he was not so surprised as Lashmore had expected him to be. In their excitement and emotion, they temporarily forgot Mr. Levison, who was again looking out of the window; but suddenly, with something like shame, Harry remembered him.

"I beg your pardon!" he said. "You mustn't think us ungrateful. Come and sit down. Forbes, a glass for Mr. Levison."

Forbes, all of a shake, got the glass, and when it was filled, Levison raised it and bowed solemnly to Lashmore, said:

"I drink to your good health and future happiness, Lord Herdale." "Lord Herdale! Lord Herdale! Oh, Master Harry—I mean, my lord—isn't it good to hear him say it!" sobbed Forbes.

Presently Mr. Levison, after making an appointment for the morrow and earnestly begging Lashmore and Forbes to keep their mouths shut, discreetly withdrew. Lashmore was left alone. He stood, looking straight before him. He had been thinking of his young wife all through the wonderful interview, though he had not mentioned her name; he was thinking of her now. He saw her standing at the gate, running forward to meet him; saw himself gather her in his arms, heard himself cry: "Eva, I am no longer nameless! I can go to your father, can face him without shame, can tell him that I have a name and a place in the world, that I am no longer a pariah and an outcast, but my father's lawful son; that you have not lost caste by marrying me, that you are not Harry Lashmore's adventurer's wife, but the Countess of Herdale!"

CHAPTER XXIV.
Kittie's Flight.

Lashmore woke from a dream the next morning—that he had proved his legitimacy and was Lord Herdale; woke to find that it was a reality and not a dream. Of course he wanted to fly over to his bride there and then, without a moment's delay; but a letter arrived that morning from Mr. Coke, asking him to undertake some additional business, which would turn out to be of advantage to them. Lashmore sighed and groaned; and he sighed and groaned again when Mr. Levison arrived and told him that it was imperatively necessary that he should remain in England for the present. The chain of evidence was complete enough for any ordinary person, but a judge on the bench and twelve jurymen in the box are not ordinary persons; and Levison very naturally wanted Lashmore close at hand, so that he might consult with him from time to time.

It was impossible for Lashmore to keep the great secret from the woman he loved for an indefinite time; so he sat down and, with infinite pains in breaking it to her, told her of the good news. He pictured her joy, her delight, in his—her—good fortune, and knew how much the prospect of a reconciliation with her father would mean to her. Then he tried to throw himself into the business that had brought him to England and succeeded; for he felt that he owed a deep debt of gratitude to Mr. Coke, a debt that he could never pay; and he was more anxious than ever to do his duty by Quirapata.

The days passed in a kind of dream; he seemed to be walking about with two personalities, and every now and then, when he was alone, he said to himself out loud: "Yes, it's true; I am Lord Herdale, my wife is the Countess of Herdale!"

He and Osborne met pretty frequently, but neither of them referred to the man who bore the title of Lord Herdale, and Lashmore, being under a pledge of secrecy to Levison, could not tell Osborne of the good news, though Lashmore had a great hankering to do so.

The letter sped on its way and reached Kittie in due course. She was waiting at the gate for the rider who brought it, and he smiled and nodded comprehensively as she tried not to snatch it from him and thanked him with a burning blush. She took the letter up to her own room, gazed at it and kissed it before opening it; and opened it slowly, so that she might prolong the pleasure.

Lashmore's epistolary gifts were not great, but he had managed to break the news to her, and she read for quite half a page with eager eyes and a loving smile. Then suddenly she came upon it. The color slowly faded from her face and left it deathly pale, the room spun round with her, and she clutched at the end of the bed to support herself, for in an instant she saw what this thing meant. They would have to return to England, to live there, to take up their proper position; her fraud would be discovered within an hour of their landing.

She would be brought face to face with the true Eva Lyndhurst; for, of course, Lashmore had dwelt upon the fact that she would now be reconciled to her father; that as the Countess of Herdale, she would take her proper place in the world, a place worthy of Sir Talbot Lyndhurst's daughter. Indeed, he dwelt upon this fact more than on anything else, though he spoke, with a feeling that brought tears to her eyes, of his own great joy in finding that he was no longer nameless.

The discovery, the shame, opened out before her like a panorama. He would cast her from him; for though he was one of those men who never prate of conscience, principle, and the rest of it, he was also one of those men who hate a lie and abhor deceit. She knew that he thought her as upright, more so, than himself, and she was assured that his heart would recoil from her and that he would put her from him. She deserved it; she could bring herself to bear her great punishment, though it would break her heart, but she could not look on his face and see it slowly changed from a loving, trustful one, to—

Ab, no; that she could not bear! Even in the midst of the horrible bewilderment, confusion, and stupor that fell upon her like a crushing crowd, she knew that she must never see him again. For hours she lay on the bed, face downwards, the letter clutched in her hand; tears would not come to her relief, though her heart seemed bursting; she could scarcely think; and yet she knew that every moment was of importance. She had to go, to hide herself from his accusing, condemning eyes. But where? She could not hope to hide herself in that country, for it would be childishly easy to trace her. Besides, though she shrank, with the feeling of a leper, from his seeing, touching her, she felt that she would go mad if she could not know what had become of him, what was happening to him.

run over to Harry? You'd still have a nice little time in England with him, and you'd have the pleasure of the voyage back together. Why, of course, it's the very thing!"

"You'll just have time to catch the ship. I saw the sailing-dates in the paper this morning. Think of it! Just run over and take him by surprise. He'll jump out of his skin with joy!"

"The thing was made so easy for her that she was almost frightened. "I—I don't like to leave you," she said, and Kittie passed the few days once began to talk of the arrangements for her departure as if the matter were settled.

There was just time, as he had said, and Kittie passed the few days before her flight in feverish preparation, which fortunately left her no time to sit about and brood; fortunately, for there were moments when she felt that it would be a relief to lose her reason. Three days later she was driven away from the cottage in which she had found happiness and joy unspeakable. She dared not look back, lest she should break down; and she fought hard with her tears as she kissed Polly and clung to Mr. Coke's hand. She knew how keenly they would both suffer when they discovered that she had left them forever, and in shame and disgrace. But she had wept bitterly enough, and her scalding tears had run down the glossy neck of her mare, as she had flung her arms round it and bidden it farewell.

The ship she caught did not carry the mail, and the letter which she had written, a few lines telling Harry that she had gone out of his life forever, and praying him to let her go without question or search for her, would be carried by the next mail and reach him when she was safe in London. The writing of those few lines had cost her an agony keener than any she had hitherto endured, for they were her farewell to him, the last words she should ever address to him; and she could see his face as he read them—the consternation, the pain, the anguish of dread which would cloud the face she had loved to kiss.

It was a pale and wan and broken-hearted woman that crept to her berth on board the good ship Fortuna. There were many aching hearts on board, but none so racked by hopeless despair as that of the wife of the Right Honorable the Earl of Herdale.

Barber Cured of Eczema

Generously Tells Others How Cure Was Effected.

Toronto, Ont., May 10th.—No one is better qualified to judge of treatment for skin troubles than the barber. He finds his customers bothered with barber's itch, pimples and eczema and has his own difficulties in treating these conditions after shaving. Mr. George Lewis, barber, 202 1/2 Wellesley street, Toronto, writes: "I was for some time troubled with an eczemic eruption on the scalp and obtained temporary relief by the use of a tonic. About six months later little blotches broke out on my face and the doctor pronounced the trouble to be eczema. I heard of Dr. Chase's Ointment through a customer who was cured by this treatment after trying many remedies in vain, so I began the use of this Ointment and in a short time the eczema entirely disappeared from my face and scalp. You can imagine my relief, as I am a barber by trade and having a face covered with pimples or blotches was not conducive to good business. I shall take great pleasure in recommending Dr. Chase's Ointment to any customers with facial or other troubles of this nature."

AN "EASY TO MAKE" DESIGN.

2052—Ladies' Apron.

But little time, material and labor will be required to make this neat and serviceable garment, which may serve as a morning work dress as well as an apron. It is comfortable and allows freedom of movement. Gingham, lawn, seersucker, chambray, drill, linen, alpaca, brilliantine and satene are all good apron materials. The neck edge may be finished square, or in "V" outline. The fulness may be confined by a belt or a drawing run through a casing. The garment may be slipped over the head or closed on the shoulders. This Pattern is cut in 4 sizes: Small for 32 and 34 inches bust measure, Medium for 36 and 38 inches bust measure, Large for 40 and 42 inches bust measure, and Extra Large for 44 and 46 inches bust measure. It requires 5 1/2 yards of 36-inch material for a Medium size.
A pattern of this illustration mailed to any address on receipt of 10 cents in silver or stamps.

A PRACTICAL AND EASILY DEVELOPED OUTFIT.

1795—This combination includes a simple one-piece dress, a comfortable undershirt or petticoat, and one-piece drawers. The dress is good for all wash fabrics, and also for serge and other woollens. In checked blue gingham with bands of white linene or dotted percale with braid trimming, it will make a very serviceable play dress. The undershirt is composed of a long-waisted body to which a straight skirt is gathered. The drawers are simple, with side seams only, thus insuring ease and comfort in wearing. The Pattern includes all three garments. It is cut in 5 sizes: 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6 years. It requires 7/8 yard for the drawers, 1 1/2 yards for the undershirt, and 2 1/2 yards for the dress, of 36-inch material, for a 4-year size.

Man Killed at Bell Island.

Special to Evening Telegram.
EAST WABANA, May 9, 1917.

An accident occurred in Dominion No. 1 mine this morning which resulted in the death of John Hunt, of Harbor Grace. Hunt was employed as face cleaner and accidentally caused some ground to fall which struck him, breaking his arm and leg. He was conveyed to the Company's surgery, where upon examination by the doctors amputation of the leg was found necessary. Hunt was apparently strong before the operation but did not regain complete consciousness after and died at four o'clock.

An Appreciation.

The Brookfield Patriotic Concert, mentioned in last Saturday's Evening Telegram was worthy of a more appreciative comment than it received. To read the paragraph in the general public will naturally have thought that the concert, promoted by the good ladies mentioned there, had been of a "back-woods sing-song" type, but it is "up to" someone to point out that it was no such an affair. The programme and the performers would not have disgraced, in any way, any of the city's concert halls. The refreshments provided and the cakes donated were of first class texture and taste and despite ample justice given to them on Wednesday evening last, there were sufficient left over for the children's party on the following afternoon and for an auction sale on Thursday evening. Concerts and such like entertainments promoted by less fortunate folk who live on the outskirts of St. John's and in the so-called "back-woods" are ever being under-praised and considering the small community around Brookfield and on the Old Placentia Road, the results obtained are deserving of a special word of appreciation by at least

Put the Returned Soldiers On.

Editor Evening Telegram.
Dear Sir,—If the Government intends to put any men on cable protection service this year, I sincerely hope they will give the returned soldiers and sailors (or those who would care to take to) the first chance. It looks rather strange in my eye to see an able-bodied man, who should offer himself for the Foresters, doing that duty, and our poor returned soldiers walking about without a job. Now, Mr. Editor, this duty is not hard work most any cripple can do it, and beside these men are all drilled and understand sentry duty.
