The Hun Fleet Come Out.

Maximilian of Baden, the German chancellor, seems to have good sense than Emperor William, in his speech before the Reichstag last Saturday. Maximilian spoke glowingly of the German army but he had nothing to say of the stay-in-port navy. Emperor William, on the other hand, spoke to boast of his naval forces. "I," he said the other day, "is fighting his own against the united naval forces and is unwaveringly supporting the army in its difficult struggle." True, the navy holds its own in the sense of avoiding defeat but that has been by the use of its ingenious expedient of the stay-in-port navy. The German fleet speaks eloquently of the German navy. "The Navy was the most powerful of the world when war broke in 1914. It was more powerful to-day. The sea is to it the world that does not know of its existence. The British navy has increased its strength but the increase is suggested by some figures which he has allowed to become known. In August, 1914, the total displacement of the navy was 2,500,000 tons. To-day it is 6,500,000 tons. The navy to-day is about 400,000 men and with 146,000 four years ago. The German fleet recently returned an overseas tour of seeing one of the Grand Fleet that was powerful than all the battleships of the navy of four years ago. The Hun sailors are wise, in sticking close to shore, because of mine fields, instead of going forth to give battle. Certainly, the facts just cited show that the British people need have no fear of the result should the enemy in decision send his fleet to sea, and it is remembered moreover, that the British fleet is not only the mighty British fleet but many vessels from the fleets of the Allied nations in readiness to Red, White and Blue.

Two's just a simple poppy. Upheld to the sky. Takin' no sort of poppy. As the pip-squeaks sithered by. But it bucked the lads up something fine.

To see its flauntin' red. An' they sang as they went up the line. Wiv the shrapnel over 'ead.

An' then they seed a daisy. Peepin' between the red. Makin' 'em most go crazy.

Wiv thoughts that filled their 'ead. Then, last there was the cornflower. Of 'Eaven's deepest blue. Makin' their thoughts fly ever.

To their maids, 'oo they know are true.

Poppy, daisy, an' cornflower. Red, an' white, an' blue. Colours of the dear old Flag. We fight for—me an' you.

The Flag we've loved from child'ood. For which we lugs our pack. Against old Jerry—blarney him!— Old England's Union Jack!

Held for Shooting.

Halifax, N. S., October 11.—A woman dressed in a soldier's uniform and suspected of being a German, is being held at the Police Station and will come up for trial to-day on a charge of attempting to murder Provost Sergeant Hunt, of the Canadian Militia Police, on Gottingen Street shortly after 9 o'clock yesterday morning. The woman refuses to talk, not even disclosing her name. When first taken to the station the police were under the impression that they were holding a man, and it was not until after noon that they learned otherwise.

Sergeant Hunt, who is stationed at the Wellington Barracks was coming down Gottingen street, and when between Gerrish and Cunard streets, he encountered a party wearing a khaki sweater, breeches and puttees. The sergeant stopped and inquired why part of a military uniform was being worn. He was told it was none of his business. Not satisfied with this answer, Sergeant Hunt says he was about to place the party under arrest, when he (she) started to run, pulled a revolver and began firing. One shot entered the sergeant's left hand.

Undaunted Hunt gave chase down Gottingen street, and although wounded in the hand, picked up a large rock and threw it after the fugitive. This rock hit her in the side and slackened her pace somewhat. Attracted by the shooting Policeman James MacDonald, of the city police, and two military policemen patrolling Gottingen street, gave chase and succeeded in capturing the prisoner on Cunard Street.

She was taken to the Police Station and questioned by Detective Kennedy, but refused to talk, not even giving her name. Shortly after noon it was discovered that the prisoner was a woman and was masquerading in a military uniform. The prisoner again refused to tell her name or give any information about herself. She speaks with a German accent, and it is believed that she is a German spy.

The Coal Situation!

The imports of coal are 7,000 tons short of last year. During the next few weeks we shall be allowed to sell coal in lots of 1 to 10 tons. After next month no schooners will be available to bring coal and the demand for coal will certainly exceed the supply.

THERE YOU HAVE IT PLAIN AND FLAT.

We are now booking coal for delivery ex schooner on arrival. If you have cellar room you will do well to let us have your order now for delivery from ship's side, while cargo is being landed.

OUR TERMS ARE STRICTLY CASH.

A supply of coal will no doubt be reserved for people who have not the means of putting in a stock for the winter, but people who have cellar room should engage a supply without delay.

"Flu" Cases.

At the Seaman's Institute, which has been taken over as a hospital with Miss Benedict, a trained nurse, in charge, sixteen cases from shipping in port have been admitted, and three others were taken in last night. The vessels from which the patients were removed have been again admitted to pratique.

Twenty cases are reported to be at Broom Bottom, near Lark Harbor, Bay of Islands. Dr. Killam, of Fortune Harbor, N.D.B., wired yesterday that many cases were at that place, and one death had ensued. Several fresh cases are reported in town.

The work of fitting up the Institute has been rushed to a finish, a large staff of carpenters and other tradesmen being employed.
