Mr. Walsh rose to speak to the Amendment. He first read the Resolutions. He came into the House for one purpose only, to assist his fellowcountrymen who are being weighed down by the weight they had to carry. He first wished to draw attention to charges made against him in the Advocate on the question of sectarianism. He had no desire to enquire into the affairs of any private firm but the F.P.U. was not a private firm. He asked in the House if the F.P.U. owed money on bonds, and he was glad to know that no money was owed the Customs. But what about the money owed on salt? Were those members who did not represent F.P.U. constituencies doing their duty? The F.P.U. motto "To Every Man His Own" should be changed to "To was no need of legislature to entail the F.P.U. All!" He charged the Minister of Marine and Fisheries for the former Government's surplus to not rising to support the Resolutions be stolen. The salt deal was so bad because they emanated from the Op- that no man concerned in it should position. He was going to marshal venture to show his face in the House his statements this afternoon under three heads.
