"The Mayfly is Up"

MESSAGE THAT FISHERMEN LONG FOR.

It was a hot day in May, and over the clear stream a number of winged insects were dancing. The mayfly was up.

They had made their annual appearance—which lasts but a day or two—the previous evening just before the sunset, the keepers of the preserved waters had sent the news by telegram all over the country.

These telegrams had been received by the various anglers, who, in most cases, had been waiting impatiently for the news, and at once they made for the trout streams, for at no other time of the year would trout bite more readily as during those few hours when the mayfly flashes over the water.

Almost at every second a silvery form would flash in the air, to fall back into the water with a loud plop as a fat trout leapt for a tempting bite, and another mayfly's short life was cut off by the fish jaws.

Mayfly Madness.

Flopi Flopi Flopi! It went on the whole time. The trout were suffering from mayfly madness, and throwing discretion to the winds. Anglers were already on the scene, tempting the trout with their various devices, and the hauls were rapid. When the mayfly is up, trout will bite at anything.

The mayfly, at the most, only lives for three days. It is a frail looking insect with wings like thin wire gauze and three long hairs like kite tails at the end of the long slender body. For every day the mayfly lives as a darting insect, it has lived a year under water as a crawling insect called a larva.

How The Larvae Live

Hatched from small, oval eggs in the water, the flat larvae live unprotected, save for their strong jaws and three feathery appendages on their abdomens.

To save their soft bodies from being swallowed by passing fish, they burrow into the bank at the bottom of the stream and live in little U-shaped burrows, so shaped that the larvae may go in at one end and out at the other without having to bend themselves double.

During their long watery lives the larvae change their skins a number of times, and in changing gradually cease to be larvae and turn into what are called pupae. Pupae is the stage just before becoming a mayfly.

A Wonderful Transformation.

When the pupa is ready—and the queer thing is that all the other pupae in the stream are ready at the same moment—it drags itself clear of the water up a convenient stem and sits in the sun. After a little while the skin splits and out crawls the delicate mayfly, complete with wings. After a few moments, during which the warmth of the sun hardens the wings, the fly sets off for its few hours of anxiety after its three years on the bed of the stream. Sometimes a mayfly lives and dies between the hours of sunrise and sundown. For this reason mayflies are sometimes called day-fly.

But though they only live for so short a time, the female mayfly manages to lay a great many eggs, some to be devoured by the trout, and many to develop new larvae.

The perfect mayflies usually come out all at once at the hour before sunset, and it is then that the keepers, watching the streams for their advent, hurry off to send the message:

"The mayfly is up!"

Wisps of Wisdom

A reserved kick helps us more than an underreserved pat.
Contentment makes poor men rich; discontent makes rich men poor.
The biggest mistake of all is constantly to be looking for small ones.
It is not enough to keep only your hands going—a clock's hands keep on going, but only in circles.
Think more about the troubles of others and less about your own.
Never judge your future possibilities by your past failures.
Some people imagine they are being sympathetic when really they are only being inquisitive.

Hints for Your Home

Dirty marks on linen blinds should be rubbed with a nail-brush dipped in Batf brick.

A good knitting-silk holder is made by wedging two clothes-pegs into each other, and winding the silk crosswise over them.

To remove dust from the crevices of carved furniture use a bicycle pump.

A new potato is a good remedy for a slight burn. Scrape or grate the potato and apply it like a poultice to the injured part.

Methylated spirit and blacklead mixed into a paste and rubbed on with flannel is excellent for cleaning greasy stoves and grates.

Open canned fruit an hour or two before serving and pour the contents of the tin into a dish. The contact of the air with the fruit will greatly improve the taste.

Bottles of milk should be buried in sawdust during warm weather. The milk will then remain at a much lower temperature than if placed in ordinary tap water.

To remove fur from a kettle, fill it nearly full with water and two teaspoonfuls of borax, and boil for half an hour. Empty, and rinse thoroughly. Before using, boil fresh water in it and rinse again.

To cure a cold in its earliest stages mix half a teaspoonful of salt with the same quantity of glycerine in a teaspoonful of warm water. Sniff this up the nose, letting it come out at the mouth. The process washes away all microbes.

To safeguard yourself against blood-poisoning, which may result even from the scratch of a pin in the laundry tub, keep a very weak mixture of carbolic and water handy. Pour this on a cloth, and wrap round the wound after careful washing.

Damp sawdust sprinkled on a dusty floor before sweeping will prevent the dust from rising. It may also be used as a protection when a room is being painted and it is not convenient to take up the linoleum. A thick layer of sawdust will absorb any paint that may be spilled.

Singing Cave

Most people have heard of the Whispering Gallery which surrounds the dome of St. Paul's Cathedral. But few living beyond the borders of the Black Country know that there is a Singing Cave in the grounds of Dudley Castle. The cave does not sing, any more than the famous gallery whispers; but by some accident in its construction, the sounds of voices ring round its cavernous walls and become possessed of such sweetness and power as to make the cave a place of enchantment.

The tomb of the wife of Sulla, in the Roman Campagna, will repeat a line of poetry which takes two and a half seconds to utter.

In a cave in the Pantheon at Rome the visitor, by only flapping his coat, can create an echo like the report of a big gun; while in the famous Leaning Tower of Pisa the sound of musical notes, either sung or played on an instrument, are so repeated and amplified that it almost seems as though an organ were playing.

Tennyson wrote his famous lyric, "The Splendour Falls," after hearing the famous bugle-echo at Killarney. A bugle blast is echoed and re-echoed from the hills till it sounds as though a hundred bugles were blowing.

If the famous Manai Suspension Bridge is taken down, as is possible, to be replaced by something more substantial, not only will a bridge be destroyed, but also a famous echo. The sound of a hammer is repeated from each supporting crossbeam in the bridge, and finally from the opposite pier 576 feet away.

GET A BIGGER THRILL.

Jud Tunkins says people like contrast. One minute they're reading the Office Cat and the next the murder news.

Brud says that he knows that the girls are going to keep on powdering. But that it sure makes him mad to find his coat covered with flour every time he leaves after calling on a certain girl.
