THE TRIUMPH OF TRUE LOVE

Lord Vivian found his mother and Miss Leigh in the picture-gallery, Beatrice looking imperially beautiful in a long, sweeping dress of black velvet made after a picturesque fashion all

"I have just been to see Violante," he said, "and she wishes very much to give our young heir her father's name. What do you think, mother? Horace Selwyn would not sound badly." Beatrice Leigh turned to him with flaming eyes.

"If I were you, my child should be called after the heroes of his race," she said. "Call him Huldibrand, that he may be wise and great in council; call him Hugh, and he may excel, as Hugh Selwyn did, in all that makes a man noble; call his Rupert, and he may be as true and loyal as that Rupert who gave his life for his king; but think twice, Vivian, before you give the heir of the Selwyns a country solicitor's

"I quite agree with Beatrice," said Mrs. Selwyn slowly. "Mr. Temple is a most respectable man, I am sure, but I do not think your eldest son should bear his name, Vivian."

Of all phrases in use, Lord Vivian disliked "respectable man" most. He shuddered to think such a title should be applied to his wife's father—a "country solicitor," too! Beatrice might have spoken differently, and yet it was true. Perhaps it was not quite reasonable that his heir-the future Lord Selwyn, who was to carry on the honors of his house—should be named after one who was aptly described as a respectable man. He wished that Mrs. Selwyn had not used those words, they haunted him.
"I should like to have pleased Violante," he said, somewhat wistfully. 'You should explain to her," said Miss Leigh, "that different castes have different customs.' She will not be so unreasonable as to let her wish to compliment her father interfere with your right to choose a name for your eldest son."

"I suppose not," he replied; and thought he thought much of Violante's fair face and pleading eyes, yet when the interview ended it was settled that the child should be called Rupert.

CHAPTER XIV.

"Once," said Miss Leigh, with an air of right royal scorn, "once let a woman of that class get the upper hand, and there would be no bounds to her abuse of authority."

"My dear Beatrice," said Mrs. Selwyn, "for my son's sake, I must really ask you not to call Violante 'a woman She really was highly respectable: her father is a gentleman, and though she is wanting in some few things, she is well-bred and re-fined; there is nothing unladylike

"No," replied Miss Leigh; "still she is not de nos autres, and never will be. The idea of wanting to call that noble boy Horace! I am glad Vivian did not allow it; it shows a great want of savoir vivre on her part.' The two ladies were in the drawing-room alone. There had been a grand christening party before and the young heir had received the name of Rupert. His sponsors were their graces the and Duchess of Halton, and no royal bantism was ever conducted with more grandeur or greater ceremony. Lord Vivian had not quite liked to tell his wife that her request was refused, that her wish could not be gratified. Still, it had to be done; there was no resisting the eloquence of Beatrice Leigh. That young lady had a fashlon of speaking as though her lips had been touched by fire. She had the gift of eloquence—so useful to a man, so useless to a woman. When she spoke of mere passing events, it was with an energy that carried all hearts with her. Her words were always well chosen, picturesque and graceful. She could always, as Vivian said of her, make a good picture in words.

She had used all her eloquence to prevent the young mistress of Selwyn Castle from having her own way over the name to be given to her child. So Vivian had gone up to see his with something like sname and hesitation on his handsome face.

"Violante," he said, very quietly, "I am afraid you will be disappointed; but I cannot do as you wished over the naming of our boy. He must be called Rupert.

"Miss Leigh would not have it, I suppose," she said, and he did not detect the pain hidden in her voice. "It was not all Beatrice," he replied.
"My mother strongly objected; and one must comply with family customs. The eldest of the Selwyns is generally called Rupert. You must ask me something else, that I may have the happiness of granting your request.' "I have no other to make," she replied, too proud to allow him to see that she was hurt. It had been on lips to ask that Horace Temple might be sent for from Oakside and asked to be her baby's sponsor; but one direct refusal she did not wish to risk another.

She said nothing to him of the pain She said nothing to him of the pain that began then, and ended—when did it end? The words of the Bible are strong. What say they of jealousy?—dark and burning and bitter as death. For the first time Lady Violante was jealous of Beatrice Leigh.

"She can do more with my husband than I can!" thought the poor child.

"Why is it? I love him and she does than I can!" thought the poor child.

"Why is it? I love him, and she does not. Why should a wish of hers over-rule a wish of mine?"

Lying there in the fragrant solitude of her room, the May sunbeams peeping in, and the odorous lilies sending up sweet messages, Lady Violante thought much of Beatrice Leigh.

"She does not like me," said the young mother to herself. "Her eyes are so beautiful, yet they always look cold and cruel at me. She smiles when she speaks to me, but her smile is like a sneer. I have never wronged her, yet she does not like me, I know."
When she recovered, and sat looking like a beautiful white lily in the pink glow of the foom hung with rose-red silk, Beatrice Leigh went in to see her. The little heir of Selwyn lay in his bassinet, a very marvel of white lace and ribbons and silk. The little golden head nestled on the pillow, and the fair, pearly face smiled even in sleep. Miss Leigh bent over him; her dislike to Vivlan's wife did not extend to

"He is very pretty, is he not?" asked the young mother, proudly.

"I suppose so," was the careless reply. "I can never see any difference in babies—they are all alike. It was not lisher. a wise thing of you, Lady Selwyn, to take Theresa Bowden as your maid." "Why not" asked Lady Violante. "I told you when I first saw her."

replied Beatrice, with a shrug of her beautiful shoulders, "that she bears a most unfortunate resemblance to yourself, and now it seems to me that the baby is more like her than anybody

"How can you say so, Miss Leigh?" indignantly cried Lady Violante. "My baby like my maid! Why, you told words. "I trust, for vivian's sake, the child may turn out a true Selwyn after all."

"Why should he not?" asked Lady Violante, her fair face flushing. "Is there any reason why my little son should not be a true Selwyn?" "None that I know of." said Miss Leigh. "It is always uncertain, I sup-pose, which side of the family children said Miss will take after." If he takes after mine," said Lady Violante, roused into something like anger, "he will be an honest gentle-

"All lawyers are gentlemen by act of parliament," said Miss Leigh, with seeming unconcern; but Lady Selwyn perceived the studied insult.

"My father is a gentleman in every sense of the word." she said; "kind, considerate, thoughtful and utterly in-capable of wounding the feelings of another person-utterly incapable of cold insult or cruel sarcasm."

"Ah, indeed!" replied Miss Leigh, as though the matter under discussion was one beneath her attention. "Has Vivian been to see you today?"

There was a strong impulse in the young wife's heart not to answer that question—to repay Miss Leigh's sarcasms by silence; but the sweet and gentle nature that had grown with her years came to the rescue now, and she answered without any trace of the emotion that was raging in her heart.
"I asked," said Miss Leigh, with a careless mile, "because we have had some long rides together lately, and I wished to know if he was going out today. But Lady Violante could not tell, and not knowing how far the sweet, for-giving temper of the young wife would extend, Miss Leigh thought it best to be civil. She talked a few common-places, of the weather, the neighborhood, the flowers, and then withdrew. Lady Violante's thoughts were not very pleasant ones. She tried to banish them, to say to herself that she was blessed and happy; yet why had Vivian been taking long drives with Beatrice? He had only mentioned being out with her once or twice, yet Beatrice spoke of it as an habitual practice. She tried to say to herself that, even if it were, nothing could be more natural: and yet she would so much rather not have known it. [To be Continued.]

It's not a new variety of headache. It's the old pain consequent on condi-tions which result from study, confine-ment, and careless eating. It is only one symptom of a derangement of the stomach and organs of digestion and nutrition. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery cures headaches by curing the diseases which cause them.

"I was troubled with very frequent headaches, often accompanied by severe vomiting," writes Miss Mary Belle Summerton, of San Diego, Duval Co., Texas. "Bowels were irregular, and my stomach and liver seemed continually out of order. Often I could eat almost nothing, and sometimes absolutely nothing, for twenty-four hours at a time. I was entirely unfit for work, and my whole system seemed so run-down that I feared a severe sick spell and was very much discouraged. I was advised to try Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and did so with such satisfactory results that before finishing the third bottle I felt perfectly able to undertake the duties attending public school life, and contracted to do so. I most heartily advise those suffering with indigestion, and its attendant evils, to we this great medicine a fair trial."

The Kansas Preacher in His New Role.

He Will Censor Both News and Ad vertisements.

Topeka, Kansas, March 13.—Rev. C. M. Sheldon, who edits the Topeka Capital this week along the lines he thinks Jesus would pursue, was at the office of the paper at half-past 8 o'clock yesterday morning, and made a hurried inspection of the inspection of the various departments. At 10 o'clock he had a conference with visiting correspondents, promising to give them such information as he could during the week. At 11 o'clock he met the working forces of the paper and gave out instructions for the day. Mr. Sheldon will employ the experienced staff of the paper, but will di-rect their operations himself along the plan he has decided on. He will knock out "scare heads," edit "objectionable" advertisements—such as patent medicine puffs, etc.—will censor the news, giving only "what people ought to know," excluding "brutal prize fights." attack saloons and political corrup-tion, fill his first page daily with spe-cial articles by eminent Christian con-tributors, giving large space to the "doings of the Christian world," inoulcate non-partisan patriotism and eschew all that is "vulgar or coarse." Mr. Sheldon's policy, it is believed, will be one of opposition to the Philippine war, annexation and expansion. for reform of the stage and revival of the Shakespearean drama, and politically non-partisan. Police court and sporting news will be discarded and murders will be stated in the fewest possible number of words. The price of the paper for the week is fixed at 25 cents, although Mr. Sheldon disclaims any money-making intent. It is believed 300,000 copies will be sold deily.

Proprietor Hudson says: "I have contract with Mr. Sheldon, and will do nothing except to make the paper as wicked as possible just before and just after the gentleman takes hold." Mr. Sheldon has refused corset, pat-ent medicine and Keeley cure ads. from conscientious reasons. He has also refused to insert ads. from Kansas City retail houses, because, he says. the Kansas City houses compete with Topeka merchants, and it is the duty of a newspaper to stand by its home Vivian yourself that he was like St. Rupert in the gallery there."

"Nay," said Beatrice, carelessly, "do not excite yourself over a few careless words. "I trust, for Vivian's sake, the child may turn out a true Selwyn child may turn out a true Selwyn lar suits going for $13 98 ads. will be conspicuous by their absence."

conspicuous by their absence."
At noon Mr. Sheldon said to the reporters: "My first editorial will set forth the scope of the paper. I would rather be deaf and dumb myself and let the paper do all the taiking for itself. This means everything to me. It is serious work, not play."

When asked by the correspondent of a Christian paper whether he had given any instructions regarding praying, Mr. Sheldon said: "No, sir; we have done our praying before this."

Regarding office rules, Mr. Sheldon aid: "There shall be no smoking in the editorial rooms." ed his reporters not to use the word "pop" in referring to a member of one political party. In interviewing a man the matter must be referred to him before publication. If he declines to be interviewed, his wishes must be re- and a large quantity of books, papers SUBSCRIBERS DON'T LIKE IT. The paper is not satisfactory to the regular subscribers, and outside papers have been bought freely today.

The first and leading editorial in the Daily Capital declared that "the main purpose of the paper will be to influence its readers to seek first the kingdom of God." Mr. Sheldon defines "news" as anything in current events that "the public ought to know for its moral and spiritual development," said is going ahead on that line. The paper during the week is to be absolutely non-partisan, and will give political news scant notice. The first item on the first page today was a new prayer contributed by Bishop J. H. Vincent.

Among other instructions to reporters
Mr. Sheldon says: "Only clean sports are wanted. Athletic sports and clean sporting events will be covered. In reporting crime go to the causes, but avoid the horrible details. Avoid scandal; waste no time on them. They will not be printed."

REJECTED BIBLE "AD." Mr. Sheldon has rejected a number of advertisements, among them being one offered by a Bible house. A few days go a prominent publisher of New York sent an "ad." In black, bold-face type was the announcement that Bibles worth $3 could be had in unlimited quantities for $1. "We do not want this ad," Mr. Sheldon said. And the advertisement did not go in the columns of the Capital.

"How could he sell a Bible worth $3

One page is devoted to local news. Murders and crimes get the barest mention, except where liquor is at the bottom of them. During a conference the sporting editor remarked that there would be a bowling contest at the Y. M. C. A. rooms.

"I think," said Mr. Sheldon, "that that is good, clean sport. You may print it." The dramatic editor asked instructions about theaters.

"We shall not want anything of that kind," Mr. Sheldon said. Telegraphic news is cut two-thirds, market reports reduced from four columns to one, and all quotations of dealings in "futures" are barred.
