TO BREED FRENCH-CANADIAN HORSES

Steps Are Being Taken to Rehabilitate a Most Famous Line of Equines.

Montreal, June 13.-Horsemen in Canada are greatly interested in the recent action of the Federal Government at Ottawa in giving authority for the establishment of a stud book in which the French-Canadian type of horse will be eligble for registration. There was a time when this distinctive breed was one of the features of the Province of Quebec, but outerosses with unsuitable stallions, chiefly Clydes and Belgians, have practically exterminated the type which once was predominant. There are, however, in a few districts some good specimens still, and an effort is to be made toward rehabilitating the

The true French-Canadian horse half a century ago was a stout-bodied horse on short legs. He had many of the qualities of the Morgan, although as a rule much larger than his American cousin, and there is little reason to doubt that many Morgans brought from Maine and Vermont across the Canadian border were used in the stud throughout Quebec and that some of the most prized of the French-Canadian horses had a strong infusion of Morgan blood. Their trapthat, it being no extraordinary thing lips which would poison their to find horses of 1.400 pounds and more are the delight of every man who tnows the horse and what is most de-

Their most distinguished characteristic was their heavy manes, tails and foretops, the hair of former invariably falling to the point of the shoulder and often to the knee, while the bottom of the tail in many instances reached ground. In the cases of the stallions the manes had to be turned on alternate sides of the neck in successive years to prevent the crest from being pulled out of shape, so heavy
