

ALONG COLD GLASS OF ICE TEA

Iced Tea on a hot day has a cooling and gently stimulating influence which strengthens and refreshes both mind and body.

Allow the tea to steep for five minutes and then pour off into another vessel to cool gradually. Never use artificial means of cooling until ready to serve; then add sugar, ice and lemon.

ONE WONDERFUL NIGHT

BY LOUIS TRACY.

"I came," she faltered—"I am here— that is—will you ever forgive me?"

Down went the papers, and round Hermione went Curtis' strong arms. He was a man of them and anger, against whom a slender strength might not hope to prevail. The last thing she looked for was to be embraced at sight. It is the last thing a woman expects, and the one thing to which she is most apt to yield. And really, despite her fluttered cry of protest, there was something very comforting and dependable about that masculine hug. Hermione had never before been clasped in a man's arms. She was a highly respectable person, and womanly woman, but she had never before been embraced so readily, but the total absence of any milk-and-water convention about Curtis' method of showing delight at meeting her was at once bewildering and stupefying.

There must be a great deal, too, which does not leap promptly to the eye in the study of such a dry-as-dust subject as psychology, because three of its fixed principles are: "Experience is the process of becoming expert by experiment." "One finds a measure of truth in the various schools of Common Sense." and "Action and Reaction are strictly correlative."

Applying these to the remarkable rapidity of decision and fixity of purpose displayed by Curtis in squeezing the breath out of Hermione, and gazing upon her with her proud head bent and sought refuge for a glowing face by hiding it on his breast, it will not be surprising that, for a man who had no experience in love, he was quickly becoming expert.

"Dear, it sounds like a dream," she said brokenly. "Can a man and a woman truly love each other who have only met as you and I have met?"

"I think we have solved that problem for all time," he said, tilting her hat with the joyous abandon of a lover's eyes. "The flowers and plaited straw which should be any of the sweet perfumery of his mistress."

"But you have plunged me into a sort of trance," she whispered. "I came here to explain—"

An ominous rattle of a ladder tray at the outer door drew them both up. Hermione rushed to her own room, thence to collect her wits, and then, when her hat and veil and disordered hair, and Curtis met a hurrying waiter.

"Sorry to bother you," he said, "but my wife has come in unexpectedly, and we shall want breakfast for two. He raised his voice. "Coffee for you, Hermione, or would you prefer tea?"

"Coffee, of course," was the answer, he so calm and collected a tone that the waiter thought he must have been mistaken in the first impression.

"No trouble at all, sir," he said, with the ready civility of his class. "Unless you wish to wait, sir, I'll bring another cup and some plaited straw and flowers from the kitchen."

"You're a man of resource," cried Curtis cheerily, leaving the arrangements to you with confidence. "Come along, Hermione. Don't say you have misapprehended."

"I won't, because I haven't," she said, expending with a smiling nonchalance which removed the last shadow of doubt from the waiter's mind. But, for all that, she electrified Curtis with a decidedly scornful glance, for she appreciated the thoughtfulness in giving her an opportunity to collect her scattered wits. There was need of some such respite; she had been so much startled, before she could possibly understand the motives which led her to flight.

Pulpit, Stage and Bench

[From T. P.'s Weekly, London, Eng.]

The Rev. C. W. Cowan wrote a book some time ago on the "Humorous Side of the Pulpit," which as often as not is the "inside" though humor often becomes evident among the congregation. This volume has been reissued in a cheap edition (Gibbins & Co., 1s. net), and I have been refreshing both myself and my memory.

THE STERN CALL.

An old-time colored preacher in America, who asked about his method replied, "I fust 'plain de text! Den I pents de arguments. And den I puts on de rousements." Can that way ever be cancelled? It is the old arrangement of doctrine and doctrine, which Atterbury's method, we are told, was to address the understanding in the first part of the sermon and the affections in the last. He practically applied at the close that he reasoned out in the beginning. Not every hearer, however, would be satisfied with this method. Doctrine is very well, but fusties are not always relished. "How did you like the doctor the day Thomas?" was asked of a north-countryman as he came out of the meeting-house. "Weel, John," was the reply, "the sermon was no't that ill, but I didna like no' trash o' duties at the hinner end o' it."

A QUICK CHANGE ARTIST.

A doctor of divinity was addressing a number of young men on "Christian work," telling them the best way to carry it out with success. This is how he described the effect upon a "city crowd" of tactics suggested which he once made: "Instantly he was transformed into an angel of light, and came marching down the aisle like a drum-major." Of the same extravagant style of oratory was different, an English curate who, describing the scene between St. Paul and St. Peter, exclaimed, "So Paul seized the banner of the Gospel out of the hands of poor, weak, compeered Peter and waved it in a flood of light and liberty over the head of the Galatian Church."

A DANGEROUS TEST.

A clergyman remarkable for the simplicity and force of his style was one day discoursing on the text, "Except ye repent, ye shall all perish." Anxious to impress upon his hearers the importance of the solemn truth conveyed in the passage he made use of a very striking figure. "Yes, my friends," he emphatically urged, "unless ye repent, ye shall all perish." Placing at the same time one of his fingers on the wing of a large fly which alighted on his Bible, and having his right hand uplifted—"just as sure, my friends, as I'll hit this big fly," before the hour come the fly got off, upon which the preacher at the top of his voice exclaimed, "There's a chance for ye yet, my friends!"

THE DANGERS OF THEIVING.

It has sometimes happened that the preacher has appropriated bodily for the pulpit the complete sermon and the attitude of his creditors resulted. A Cambridge don could hardly have been reading his own composition when he made the sudden appeal to an astounded congregation. "And now, a word to you who are mothers." A young curate-friend of my own in preaching one Sunday read from his manuscript, "After forty years' ministering to you, I have in fact using one of his father's sermons and he had not taken the precaution of reading it beforehand."

UNNATURAL HISTORY.

One remembers of a legal tale of the case of the barrister whom Mr. Justice Byles tells as of in his "Leaves of a Life." He lost his self-possession at the critical moment, and in the confusion a woman who was charged with causing the death of her child with not giving it proper food or treating it with the necessary care. In address to the jury he said, "Gentlemen, it appears to be impossible that the prisoner can have committed this crime. A mother guilty of this conduct to her own child? Why, it is repugnant to our better feelings." And then, carried away by his own eloquence, he proceeded: "Gentlemen, the beasts of the field, the birds of the air suckle their own young, and—" But at this moment the learned judge interrupted him and said, "Mr. F.,—if you establish the latter part of your proposition your client will be acquitted to a certainty."

AN OVERDUE EXPLOSION.

There are many tales of Sir Herbert Tree going about. But there is one from the Daily Citizen that strikes one as new. Sir Herbert, in common with many other members of the theatrical profession, has a belief that another well-known actor-manager is extremely conceited and possesses a very fine sample of what is known as "a good head." Those who are acquainted with the London stage will realize who is meant at once. For the sake of the story I will call him "A. B." One afternoon, when Sir Herbert Tree was on the stage of His Majesty's Theatre, there was a gas explosion a couple of hundred yards away at the top of Haymarket and a large quantity of gas fell from a roof to the pavement. The loud report startled the rehearsing actors. "Good heavens!" cried Tree in shocked and horror-stricken tones. "A. B.'s head has burst at last!"

SCOTT'S LITERARY REWARD.

Sir Robert Allison reminds us of the amazing industry of Scott. "It is not astonishing to find that the results of his industry are unparalleled in the history of literature. In the first month of 1826 he is bankrupt to the tune of £140,000. But by December, 1827, in less than two years he has by his own unaided pen produced no less than £22,000 in reduction of his debt. No wonder that he tells us in his journal of the surprise of his creditors at the exertions which, in so short a time, have produced so large a sum. "Woodstock" alone, written in three months—and in three months when he was at the very bottom of the abyss—produced more than £8,000."

A RECORD.

"I question," he says, "if more was ever made by a single work on a single author's table in the same time." His rate of composition was, I suppose, the fastest known in the record of literary men. We have it carefully noted down from day to day. Thus in fifteen days, from January 23rd to February 2nd, in 1826, the very year of his ruin and within a few weeks of his first hearing of it, he writes a volume. "A volume," he says, "at least is worth a thousand pounds," so that he was writing at a rate of no less than £24,000 a year. By such efforts his Thin, brittle, colorless and scraggy hair is mute evidence of a neglected scalp; of dandruff—that awful scurf. There is nothing so destructive to the hair as dandruff. It robs the hair of its lustre, its strength and its very life; eventually, producing a feverishness and itching of the scalp, which, if not remedied causes the hair roots to shrink, loosen and die—then the hair falls out.

NON-COMMITAL

Replying to a writer's request for an opinion on some rather heavy articles, an editor in returning the MSS. says the Evening Standard, wrote that the articles "carried great weight." This story reminds us of Lord Beaconsfield's letter to a young author who had sent the statesman a copy of his book. "I shall lose no time in reading it," was the witty acknowledgment.
