

A SPY IN THE CONFESSORIAL.

REBELLION CAUSED IN THE TIPPERARY TRIALS

By a "Shadow" Admitting that he had advised to Overhear What Passed in the Confessional. The trial of the Tipperary trials in the evidence of one witness, a policeman, who testified he followed several defendants into the confessional of the Catholic Church and to overhear what was said there by them. This testimony aroused the indignation of counsel for the defendants and he demanded to know if the confessional could be invaded. The court room became a babel of cries, and the confusion was so great that it was impossible to go on with the proceedings. The court was therefore adjourned for half an hour. When the court resumed the policeman witness was cross-examined by Mr. Harrington, who called witness "a shadow."
