[From the Gentleman's Magazine.]

"Perhaps," I thought, "but at present I don't quite see the answer to this charming conundrum." I was beginning to get angry, but I determined to keep my temper.

all went to church, and in the afternoon Mrs. Grahame and I went to the Zoological Gardens. It was just 9 o'clock that evening, and we were sitting in the drawing room before supper, when a messenger came to the house to ask if Mrs. Grahame would go to see a Mrs. Wilmore, who was very ill at Highgate. Mrs. Wilmore had been a school-fellow of Mrs. Grahame's. She was the only very intimate friend that Mrs. Grahame had, so Mrs. Grahame went at once for a cab and went to see her. Before she departed she left orders that the house was to be shut up if she did not return by 12 o'clock, and that the hall door was to be left unlocked, and a candle and matches left for her in the hall, so that she could get in at any time. Her bedroom with white curtains was left open, and a candle was left for her in the hall, so that she could get in at any time.

and then the next thing was she came into the kitchen in a great hurry with her things on, and she said to me, "I don't know what I have done, but I have just found out that Mrs. Wilmore is dead." She said that she had found her in bed, and that she had been dead some time. She said that she had found her in bed, and that she had been dead some time.

and then the next thing was she came into the kitchen in a great hurry with her things on, and she said to me, "I don't know what I have done, but I have just found out that Mrs. Wilmore is dead." She said that she had found her in bed, and that she had been dead some time.
