

them were a number of Greek priests, some of them good-looking young fellows, whose long black hair, arranged in a Greek knot at the back of their heads, and black robes, gave them a very girlish look. There ets. Mothers were nursing their infants, clucking over their wandering children like a hen over its brood, lugging their beds around the deck. Some were eating their evening meal of coarse bread in great were old men and old women in fur-lined cloaks carrying their belongings and provisions in large round baskets. Some of the men wore baggy Turkish trousers, red fez and girdle and bright embroidered jackhunks, with a bit of cheese or a few onions. Some were clothed in ragged embroidered finery and adorned with cheap jewellery; others had good gold watches.

SALAMIS, CYPRUS, A TYPICAL SCENE IN CYPRIOTE WATERS.

A handsome, bejewelled woman