A suitable place for a "winter port"—Portland.

A State that should make its mark—Pennsylvania.

See Conlon's advertisement for photos for the holidays.

"I'm working the growler," said the boy when he tied a tin kettle to the dog's story.

All bars are horizontal. Who ever heard of a man drinking at a perpendicular bar?

The owners of fighting dogs use the expression "chew a listener," instead of biting ears.

Wonderful though it may seem, a goldsmith can conceal eighteen karats in a small gold finger ring.

"Excuse my back," said the boy, as he turned round to receive a chastisement from his school teacher.

Sign of a general election—Our Dominion representative comes out boldly (ate of course) to look after our "Fish."

Don't forget to call at D. J. Jennings' book store, 167 Union street, and examine his stock of Christmas and New Year novelties.

Our experience with book keepers has proved conclusively that the only and original patent is found in a book agent when times are dull.

Elevate your galeotta to the summit of your pericranium and allow me to present to your ocular demonstration that most wonderful piece of mechanism which constitutes the egress portion of this apartment. In other words, there's the door; git!

A soldier who deserted on the eve of the battle of Waterloo, in referring to the incident afterward said Wellington made an address to the troops before the battle, telling them to strike for their country, and while the men were striking for their country, said he, "I was striking for home."

A GIRLISH DOG.—There is a small greyhound at Greenfield, Missouri, who is very fond of dolls. The little girls in the family of his master sometimes allowed him to carry their dolls around the parlor in his mouth, and he went through the operation wagging his tail with great vigor. One day an older sister made a doll expressly for the greyhound, and made him understand that it was his own property. At once he ran off and hid it where it could not be found. Several days after, seeing the children playing with their dolls, he begged to be let out of the house. He went directly to the corner of the yard where he had buried his doll like a bone, dug it up, shook it free from dirt, and rejoined the group in the house with his pet in his mouth, and his tail more active than ever.
