

What follows are the results of a questionnaire on the relationship between neoliberal economic policies and social, economic and cultural rights. Questionnaires were sent out to Latin American human rights organizations in the fall of 1997 and early 1998. Their purpose is to determine the perspectives of partner organizations on neoliberal economic policies and on how to address any negative impacts (with respect to social, economic and cultural rights) which may have resulted from them. Additionally, the questionnaire sought to determine what partners follow KCHRLA's role should be in working to address these rights concerns including how neoliberal economic policies in general or from Caribbean states and a particular in particular.

Ten (10) questionnaire responses were received, representing approximately 45% of those sent. The questionnaire responses were from Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, El Salvador and Mexico (please see list of questionnaire respondents below). The responses were collected both in writing and from informal interviews.

What follows is a summary of the responses, as well as the KCHRLA work plan devoted to address social, economic and cultural rights violations resulting from neoliberal economic policies based in large part on these responses.
