

Unpegging of Canadian Dollar

way, shape or form support the pegging of the dollar. He said it need not have been pegged. It would appear from the views we get from people all over the country who have been following this situation that it cannot help but increase unemployment.

As I have said, the minister has been wasting his time all evening because he has not been listening to any of the representations that have been made. Again I say that on occasion the remarks he has made in this House have been so far removed from the fact as to be ridiculous. I said that I hoped to defend the minister, and that this was not all his responsibility. The responsibility lies with the Prime Minister who is continually dictating to a group of cabinet ministers who do not have the intestinal fortitude to stand up and resist policies which they know are detrimental to the Canadian economy. The minister shakes his head, but it is not a very emphatic shake. We are fully aware of the fact that this policy, adopted since last Wednesday, could not have come from anyone but the Prime Minister on his return to Canada.
