The vigilance of the Ontario license department has unearched this week evidence of one of the most successful attempts at illegal liquor sale which have occurred within the older parts of the province in recent years. As a result a Jewish storekeeper in the Town of Acton has been penalized with two fines of $200 and $150 respectively, with costs in each case, and a narrow escape from a third on the same town another man was fined $150 and costs with the option of three months in prison for retaining liquor in a private house for public display.

It is evident from the proceedings taken in each case that the large number of railway laborers engaged in construction work in Acton at the present time had proved the inducement to illegality. Morris Saxe, who on two occasions was discovered by the provincial officers to be supplying whiskey to them, keeps a small general store.

Sold Large Quantities. On Saturday evening it was the practice for the workmen to secure quantities for consumption the next day. The amount of drunkenness and the broils resulting aroused suspicion and the preliminary investigations of Inspector Ayearst and his associates showed the system to be operating on a large scale. Saxe was found guilty on the charge and fined. Another complaint was lodged with the department on Aug. 20. The failed, however, but on Sept. 6 large quantities of whiskey of a cheap variety were again discovered in a raid. This time the good man brought a heavy fine. The attention of the department was immediately directed to another party in the same town, John Bridges, who was found to be in the habit of secreting large consignments of spirits in his house. For having it for sale without a license he was fined $150 and costs.

Proved an Alibi. The charge against the Hebrew grocer on the second occasion fell thru on his production of an alibi. The department, however, held some of the evidence in his premises. Acton is not a local option town and has two licensed hotels in operation.

WISCONSIN MAN'S BIG POTATO PATCH. Covers More Than Three Hundred Acres and Yields Big Returns.

HANCOCK, Wis.—Many Wisconsin farmers are indeed not a few in the vicinity of Hancock, will open their eyes in wonder when told of a 320-acre potato patch on the farm of the O'Connor brothers in the Town of Hancock.

The longest rows in this field are eight-tenths of a mile long, and half a mile the other. Edward Erb, one of the crew on the large farm, marked the field with a four-row sled marker, and this almost perfect work is an important part of the system followed on the O'Connor farm. Their sprayers cover four rows and do much better work with less waste when the rows are straight. The diggers are drawn by four horses. The plants on this big potato field are a fine stand and cover the ground, being almost a mat on forty acres of the earlier ones. The sight is a wonderful one to the visitor, but is common on the O'Connor farm, which has been in the lead in the production of potatoes, clover and rye. During that time the potato acreage has been larger in several years than now. One large field in Stephens County, where a peanut oil mill is now in operation, and a peanut products plant, employing about 100 persons, will soon be in operation.

Stephens County farmers have realized a net profit of $150 an acre from their peanuts. The cost of planting, cultivating and harvesting is practically the same as for corn, ranging from $3.50 to $4. The best soil for peanuts is a sandy loam. They resist drought, demanding little moisture, and yet are not injuriously affected by heavy rains. They mature in 90 days. The varieties that are being grown are Spanish, Virginia white, Tennessee red and Jumbo. The Spanish give a larger yield and are in greater demand. The most profitable way to handle a peanut crop is to mow the hay and bale it for the dairy herd or the work stock, and to "hog out" the nuts. An acre of nuts produces from 150 to 1800 pounds of produce. Since the hay more than pays the cost of production, and the peanuts, being legumes, improve the soil, the farmer produces a net profit to the tune of $100 an acre.
