An incriminating article in The Naro Do Voletz was produced in court. In it the writer declared the policy of the Russian revolutionists was the same as that of the Terrorists of 20 years ago, and pointed out that Czar Nicholas had already reigned three years at a period when the revolutionist campaign ought to be summed up in the word "Regicide." WAR AMONG SOLDIERS. Serman and Boliemian Regiments Do Not Dwell Together in Harmony.

London, Dec. 22 .- A despatch to The London, Dec. 22.—A despatch to The Daily Mail from Vienna records incidents showing that racial animosity has extended to the army. A racial quarrel in the Ferdinand Infantry barracks at Prague resulted in a fight with side arms between the 102nd Bohemian and the Eighteenth German regiments. One soldier was killed and seven were dangerously wounded. The Bohemian regiment has since been transferred to another place.

Intionist campaign ought to be summed up in the word "Regicide." If he had been assassinated on the day of the funeral of Czar Alexander II., the article continues, either a revolution would have broken out or a liberal constitution would have been declared.

Each new autocrat, according to the writer, ought to have been given a year, and if he had not granted a constitution at the end of that period, he ought to have been attacked without pity.

Detective Melville testified regarding his visit to Bourtzeff's room, and the finding of documents relating to Nihills, the assassination of Alexander II., the death of Stepniak, and to the preparent Czar.

Both prisoners were remanded. Bourtzeff escaped from Siberia to Constantitople, where the Russian police tried to seize him on board a British steimer, but the captain of the vessel prevented.

able deflection of the magnetic needle over an immense area in Central Russia have given curious results.

The observations were confined to the strip of country between Moscow and Kharkov, a distance of about 850 miles. The needle showed the greatest aberrations in the Province of Kursk, where in the north it was deflected 20 degrees. One hundred and fifty miles southeastward the deflection exceeded 96 degrees, the needle pointing east and west, in stend of north and south.

Engineers who are engaged building railroads in that part of the country are much interested in the experiments, They speculate as to how the magnetization will affect the durability of the rails.

Windsor Merchants Took Heasures to Pretect Their Christmas Trade.

Windsor, Ont., Dec. 22.—Windsor merchants have been registering a strong kick with the Government against allowing people to go over to Detroit to buy Christmas presents, and in order to discourage, the practice as much as possible four special efficiers have been sent to Windsor. Their prian is to go across to Detroit and watch Windsor people buying things, and on their return tip them off to the regular officers, who take them into the Custom House and search them. No less than 50 people were held up in this way yesterday.

Remember the old Men. The friends who have been kind and thoughtful of the old men in the past are asked to remember them in their Christmas givings this year. Mrs. Lloyd. 68 Spadina-road, treasurer, will be happy to receive cash contributions. Groceries or provisions will be gratefully received at the Home, 203 Sackville street.
