

The Chronicle. In published every Friday afternoon by Lewis W. Durrant & Co. at their Office in Mr. D. M. Millar's building, Prince William Street.

Table with 2 columns: Day and Price. Rows include Sunday, Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, Friday, and Saturday.

Public Institutions. Bank of New-Brunswick—Salomon Nichols, Esq. President—Discount Days, Tuesday and Friday.

Commercial Bank—Charles Simonds, Esq. President—Discount Days, Tuesday and Friday.

New-Brunswick Fire Insurance Company—John M. Wilton, Esq. President—Office open every day.

Savings Bank—Hon. Ward Chipman, President—Office hours, from 1 to 3 o'clock on Tuesday.

Marine Insurance—L. B. Hodell, Broker. The committee of Underwriters meet every morning at 10 o'clock.

THE POOR MAN'S MAY. Sweet May! you tell me thou art come, Ah, no! not come to me.

Oh! can I forget to bend o'er my loom, So many long hours in this dark sitting room.

Oh! can I forget to bend o'er my loom, So many long hours in this dark sitting room.

Oh! can I forget to bend o'er my loom, So many long hours in this dark sitting room.

Oh! can I forget to bend o'er my loom, So many long hours in this dark sitting room.

Oh! can I forget to bend o'er my loom, So many long hours in this dark sitting room.

Oh! can I forget to bend o'er my loom, So many long hours in this dark sitting room.

Oh! can I forget to bend o'er my loom, So many long hours in this dark sitting room.

Oh! can I forget to bend o'er my loom, So many long hours in this dark sitting room.

Oh! can I forget to bend o'er my loom, So many long hours in this dark sitting room.

Oh! can I forget to bend o'er my loom, So many long hours in this dark sitting room.

Oh! can I forget to bend o'er my loom, So many long hours in this dark sitting room.

Oh! can I forget to bend o'er my loom, So many long hours in this dark sitting room.

Oh! can I forget to bend o'er my loom, So many long hours in this dark sitting room.

Oh! can I forget to bend o'er my loom, So many long hours in this dark sitting room.

Oh! can I forget to bend o'er my loom, So many long hours in this dark sitting room.

an affection which no wealthy could purchase, and no remuneration repay, for it sprang from heartfelt and devoted attachment.

Stained with pleasure and shattered in constitution, a stranger came to seek health in this sheltered spot. It was Desborough. Neither the youth nor the beauty, nor the innocence of Edith availed her against the snare and enigma of this unprincipled man.

Edith was the victim of the most treacherous plot, and the plot of the most treacherous villain. She fell—and was deserted! "I implore me no more as to marriage," said the deceiving remark of Vincent's last letter to him.

Edith was the victim of the most treacherous plot, and the plot of the most treacherous villain. She fell—and was deserted! "I implore me no more as to marriage," said the deceiving remark of Vincent's last letter to him.

Edith was the victim of the most treacherous plot, and the plot of the most treacherous villain. She fell—and was deserted! "I implore me no more as to marriage," said the deceiving remark of Vincent's last letter to him.

Edith was the victim of the most treacherous plot, and the plot of the most treacherous villain. She fell—and was deserted! "I implore me no more as to marriage," said the deceiving remark of Vincent's last letter to him.

Edith was the victim of the most treacherous plot, and the plot of the most treacherous villain. She fell—and was deserted! "I implore me no more as to marriage," said the deceiving remark of Vincent's last letter to him.

Edith was the victim of the most treacherous plot, and the plot of the most treacherous villain. She fell—and was deserted! "I implore me no more as to marriage," said the deceiving remark of Vincent's last letter to him.

Edith was the victim of the most treacherous plot, and the plot of the most treacherous villain. She fell—and was deserted! "I implore me no more as to marriage," said the deceiving remark of Vincent's last letter to him.

Edith was the victim of the most treacherous plot, and the plot of the most treacherous villain. She fell—and was deserted! "I implore me no more as to marriage," said the deceiving remark of Vincent's last letter to him.

Edith was the victim of the most treacherous plot, and the plot of the most treacherous villain. She fell—and was deserted! "I implore me no more as to marriage," said the deceiving remark of Vincent's last letter to him.

Edith was the victim of the most treacherous plot, and the plot of the most treacherous villain. She fell—and was deserted! "I implore me no more as to marriage," said the deceiving remark of Vincent's last letter to him.

Edith was the victim of the most treacherous plot, and the plot of the most treacherous villain. She fell—and was deserted! "I implore me no more as to marriage," said the deceiving remark of Vincent's last letter to him.

Edith was the victim of the most treacherous plot, and the plot of the most treacherous villain. She fell—and was deserted! "I implore me no more as to marriage," said the deceiving remark of Vincent's last letter to him.

Edith was the victim of the most treacherous plot, and the plot of the most treacherous villain. She fell—and was deserted! "I implore me no more as to marriage," said the deceiving remark of Vincent's last letter to him.

the departed—and sweeps away with it the attention of the mourner to the ruling folly of the hour.

It is a world of stone. The grave is longer—closed—forgot. And then life hurries on.

Engaged in the all-important duty of securing the property which had been bequeathed to their son, and which, as he had left to will, there was some probability of his losing, the Robinsons had completely forgotten him by whose services it had been acquired.

At length it occurred to them that some monument was due, or, at all events, that the grave should be raised to some visible height beneath the yew tree in Brading churchyard; and directions were given accordingly.

It was justly punished, was the remark of the simple description of the man of the departed—the day of birth and the day of death, with the remarkable identity in the large and striking letters—

CHAPTER IX. Some years after the circumstances detailed in the last chapter, a gentleman, an military officer, was described as being in the village of Brading.

The name of Somers was not far from the village of Brading, and he had just arrived from the interior of the church at that hour.

The church was one of considerable magnitude and surpassing beauty. It was built in the form of a cross, and had formerly been the seat of a wealthy monastic order, suppressed at the period of the Reformation.

At the close of the sitting, I went to receive the commands, and having taken leave of him, I stepped into my carriage, and drove homeward.

CHAPTER X. Before Sir John Nichol, The Abbot's Seizure. This was a suit promoted by the Owners, Captain and crew of two fishing Smacks, the Harlequin and Bradshaw, for salvage services rendered during their capture.

The King's Advocate and Dr. Adams, appeared for the Harlequin, and submitted that it was by the express command of the court that the Abbot's seizure, a part of the cargo having been thrown overboard, and was wholly demolished.

CHAPTER XI. The King's Advocate and Dr. Adams, appeared for the Harlequin, and submitted that it was by the express command of the court that the Abbot's seizure, a part of the cargo having been thrown overboard, and was wholly demolished.

CHAPTER XII. The King's Advocate and Dr. Adams, appeared for the Harlequin, and submitted that it was by the express command of the court that the Abbot's seizure, a part of the cargo having been thrown overboard, and was wholly demolished.

CHAPTER XIII. The King's Advocate and Dr. Adams, appeared for the Harlequin, and submitted that it was by the express command of the court that the Abbot's seizure, a part of the cargo having been thrown overboard, and was wholly demolished.

CHAPTER XIV. The King's Advocate and Dr. Adams, appeared for the Harlequin, and submitted that it was by the express command of the court that the Abbot's seizure, a part of the cargo having been thrown overboard, and was wholly demolished.

the vent, and of his appointment, and it was only late on the morning of the following day, when the vessel was before him, but he was so excited that he could not be prevailed upon to disembark.

Among the many who pressed forward to view the small specimen was an elderly female, much beloved in the village for her kindly and gentle and compassionate heart, and to her the sexton handed a small memorandum, which had some of the words of the complete destruction.

These, she said, "are the remains of Colonel Vincent Desborough. May he rest with that name on High which will begeth him, and the village did homage to her by observing a respectful silence. They all knew and loved her. This spectacle, she continued, "operates fortuitously, and I thought it were long since dry; but chiefly and mainly do I think that the measure we meet to do is to be measured into us again."

Josephine had been divorced, and the Austrian Archduchess had been chosen her successor, when of the Imperial Church, and she was now in the possession of a large fortune, and she was now in the possession of a large fortune, and she was now in the possession of a large fortune.

CHAPTER XV. The King's Advocate and Dr. Adams, appeared for the Harlequin, and submitted that it was by the express command of the court that the Abbot's seizure, a part of the cargo having been thrown overboard, and was wholly demolished.

CHAPTER XVI. The King's Advocate and Dr. Adams, appeared for the Harlequin, and submitted that it was by the express command of the court that the Abbot's seizure, a part of the cargo having been thrown overboard, and was wholly demolished.

CHAPTER XVII. The King's Advocate and Dr. Adams, appeared for the Harlequin, and submitted that it was by the express command of the court that the Abbot's seizure, a part of the cargo having been thrown overboard, and was wholly demolished.

CHAPTER XVIII. The King's Advocate and Dr. Adams, appeared for the Harlequin, and submitted that it was by the express command of the court that the Abbot's seizure, a part of the cargo having been thrown overboard, and was wholly demolished.

CHAPTER XIX. The King's Advocate and Dr. Adams, appeared for the Harlequin, and submitted that it was by the express command of the court that the Abbot's seizure, a part of the cargo having been thrown overboard, and was wholly demolished.

CHAPTER XX. The King's Advocate and Dr. Adams, appeared for the Harlequin, and submitted that it was by the express command of the court that the Abbot's seizure, a part of the cargo having been thrown overboard, and was wholly demolished.

CHAPTER XXI. The King's Advocate and Dr. Adams, appeared for the Harlequin, and submitted that it was by the express command of the court that the Abbot's seizure, a part of the cargo having been thrown overboard, and was wholly demolished.

CHAPTER XXII. The King's Advocate and Dr. Adams, appeared for the Harlequin, and submitted that it was by the express command of the court that the Abbot's seizure, a part of the cargo having been thrown overboard, and was wholly demolished.

CHAPTER XXIII. The King's Advocate and Dr. Adams, appeared for the Harlequin, and submitted that it was by the express command of the court that the Abbot's seizure, a part of the cargo having been thrown overboard, and was wholly demolished.

CHAPTER XXIV. The King's Advocate and Dr. Adams, appeared for the Harlequin, and submitted that it was by the express command of the court that the Abbot's seizure, a part of the cargo having been thrown overboard, and was wholly demolished.

CHAPTER XXV. The King's Advocate and Dr. Adams, appeared for the Harlequin, and submitted that it was by the express command of the court that the Abbot's seizure, a part of the cargo having been thrown overboard, and was wholly demolished.

from almost certain destruction. The Abbot in Dec. last a very tempestuous season of the year, had by a heavy gale been totally demolished, and a part of her cargo thrown overboard, to enable the crew to lighten her, so that if she went ashore, they might have a better chance of saving their lives.

The order of £100, under these circumstances, was insufficient. In the case of a vessel that could not be insured, being liable to the loss of the cargo, the order of £100, under these circumstances, was insufficient.

The King's Advocate applied, on behalf of the owners of the Harlequin, to have an allotment of the cargo, as the vessel had been much strained in performing the service. He was at the same time requested to draw the attention of the court to the importance of the service.

The King's Advocate applied, on behalf of the owners of the Harlequin, to have an allotment of the cargo, as the vessel had been much strained in performing the service. He was at the same time requested to draw the attention of the court to the importance of the service.

CHAPTER XXVI. The King's Advocate and Dr. Adams, appeared for the Harlequin, and submitted that it was by the express command of the court that the Abbot's seizure, a part of the cargo having been thrown overboard, and was wholly demolished.

CHAPTER XXVII. The King's Advocate and Dr. Adams, appeared for the Harlequin, and submitted that it was by the express command of the court that the Abbot's seizure, a part of the cargo having been thrown overboard, and was wholly demolished.

CHAPTER XXVIII. The King's Advocate and Dr. Adams, appeared for the Harlequin, and submitted that it was by the express command of the court that the Abbot's seizure, a part of the cargo having been thrown overboard, and was wholly demolished.

CHAPTER XXIX. The King's Advocate and Dr. Adams, appeared for the Harlequin, and submitted that it was by the express command of the court that the Abbot's seizure, a part of the cargo having been thrown overboard, and was wholly demolished.

CHAPTER XXX. The King's Advocate and Dr. Adams, appeared for the Harlequin, and submitted that it was by the express command of the court that the Abbot's seizure, a part of the cargo having been thrown overboard, and was wholly demolished.

CHAPTER XXXI. The King's Advocate and Dr. Adams, appeared for the Harlequin, and submitted that it was by the express command of the court that the Abbot's seizure, a part of the cargo having been thrown overboard, and was wholly demolished.

CHAPTER XXXII. The King's Advocate and Dr. Adams, appeared for the Harlequin, and submitted that it was by the express command of the court that the Abbot's seizure, a part of the cargo having been thrown overboard, and was wholly demolished.

CHAPTER XXXIII. The King's Advocate and Dr. Adams, appeared for the Harlequin, and submitted that it was by the express command of the court that the Abbot's seizure, a part of the cargo having been thrown overboard, and was wholly demolished.

CHAPTER XXXIV. The King's Advocate and Dr. Adams, appeared for the Harlequin, and submitted that it was by the express command of the court that the Abbot's seizure, a part of the cargo having been thrown overboard, and was wholly demolished.

CHAPTER XXXV. The King's Advocate and Dr. Adams, appeared for the Harlequin, and submitted that it was by the express command of the court that the Abbot's seizure, a part of the cargo having been thrown overboard, and was wholly demolished.

CHAPTER XXXVI. The King's Advocate and Dr. Adams, appeared for the Harlequin, and submitted that it was by the express command of the court that the Abbot's seizure, a part of the cargo having been thrown overboard, and was wholly demolished.

every portion of it, an ulcer or any other disease which may exist cannot possibly heal. If the matter does not aggravate the complaint, the state of distention in which the lung is kept, and the separation of the diaphragm or ribs, are the principal sources of the disease, and are the principal sources of the disease, and are the principal sources of the disease.

Now, the object of the operation for consumption is to make a permanent opening in the chest, so as to allow the air to enter freely and compress the lung—to give nature an opportunity (while the lung is in a state of rest) to absorb the diseased matter, or to let the diseased parts be cleared, and to afford the diseased an opportunity to resort to the ligaments or ribs, where they may be benefited. In the first place, the surface of the nature of the chest is not in that position—as in any position in which the patient may be placed, sitting, standing or lying, every movement of the body centres in the head of the thigh bone, and consequently aggravates the existing disease and renders it incurable.

Now, the object of the operation for consumption is to make a permanent opening in the chest, so as to allow the air to enter freely and compress the lung—to give nature an opportunity (while the lung is in a state of rest) to absorb the diseased matter, or to let the diseased parts be cleared, and to afford the diseased an opportunity to resort to the ligaments or ribs, where they may be benefited. In the first place, the surface of the nature of the chest is not in that position—as in any position in which the patient may be placed, sitting, standing or lying, every movement of the body centres in the head of the thigh bone, and consequently aggravates the existing disease and renders it incurable.

Now, the object of the operation for consumption is to make a permanent opening in the chest, so as to allow the air to enter freely and compress the lung—to give nature an opportunity (while the lung is in a state of rest) to absorb the diseased matter, or to let the diseased parts be cleared, and to afford the diseased an opportunity to resort to the ligaments or ribs, where they may be benefited. In the first place, the surface of the nature of the chest is not in that position—as in any position in which the patient may be placed, sitting, standing or lying, every movement of the body centres in the head of the thigh bone, and consequently aggravates the existing disease and renders it incurable.

Now, the object of the operation for consumption is to make a permanent opening in the chest, so as to allow the air to enter freely and compress the lung—to give nature an opportunity (while the lung is in a state of rest) to absorb the diseased matter, or to let the diseased parts be cleared, and to afford the diseased an opportunity to resort to the ligaments or ribs, where they may be benefited. In the first place, the surface of the nature of the chest is not in that position—as in any position in which the patient may be placed, sitting, standing or lying, every movement of the body centres in the head of the thigh bone, and consequently aggravates the existing disease and renders it incurable.

Now, the object of the operation for consumption is to make a permanent opening in the chest, so as to allow the air to enter freely and compress the lung—to give nature an opportunity (while the lung is in a state of rest) to absorb the diseased matter, or to let the diseased parts be cleared, and to afford the diseased an opportunity to resort to the ligaments or ribs, where they may be benefited. In the first place, the surface of the nature of the chest is not in that position—as in any position in which the patient may be placed, sitting, standing or lying, every movement of the body centres in the head of the thigh bone, and consequently aggravates the existing disease and renders it incurable.

Now, the object of the operation for consumption is to make a permanent opening in the chest, so as to allow the air to enter freely and compress the lung—to give nature an opportunity (while the lung is in a state of rest) to absorb the diseased matter, or to let the diseased parts be cleared, and to afford the diseased an opportunity to resort to the ligaments or ribs, where they may be benefited. In the first place, the surface of the nature of the chest is not in that position—as in any position in which the patient may be placed, sitting, standing or lying, every movement of the body centres in the head of the thigh bone, and consequently aggravates the existing disease and renders it incurable.

Now, the object of the operation for consumption is to make a permanent opening in the chest, so as to allow the air to enter freely and compress the lung—to give nature an opportunity (while the lung is in a state of rest) to absorb the diseased matter, or to let the diseased parts be cleared, and to afford the diseased an opportunity to resort to the ligaments or ribs, where they may be benefited. In the first place, the surface of the nature of the chest is not in that position—as in any position in which the patient may be placed, sitting, standing or lying, every movement of the body centres in the head of the thigh bone, and consequently aggravates the existing disease and renders it incurable.

Now, the object of the operation for consumption is to make a permanent opening in the chest, so as to allow the air to enter freely and compress the lung—to give nature an opportunity (while the lung is in a state of rest) to absorb the diseased matter, or to let the diseased parts be cleared, and to afford the diseased an opportunity to resort to the ligaments or ribs, where they may be benefited. In the first place, the surface of the nature of the chest is not in that position—as in any position in which the patient may be placed, sitting, standing or lying, every movement of the body centres in the head of the thigh bone, and consequently aggravates the existing disease and renders it incurable.

Now, the object of the operation for consumption is to make a permanent opening in the chest, so as to allow the air to enter freely and compress the lung—to give nature an opportunity (while the lung is in a state of rest) to absorb the diseased matter, or to let the diseased parts be cleared, and to afford the diseased an opportunity to resort to the ligaments or ribs, where they may be benefited. In the first place, the surface of the nature of the chest is not in that position—as in any position in which the patient may be placed, sitting, standing or lying, every movement of the body centres in the head of the thigh bone, and consequently aggravates the existing disease and renders it incurable.

Now, the object of the operation for consumption is to make a permanent opening in the chest, so as to allow the air to enter freely and compress the lung—to give nature an opportunity (while the lung is in a state of rest) to absorb the diseased matter, or to let the diseased parts be cleared, and to afford the diseased an opportunity to resort to the ligaments or ribs, where they may be benefited. In the first place, the surface of the nature of the chest is not in that position—as in any position in which the patient may be placed, sitting, standing or lying, every movement of the body centres in the head of the thigh bone, and consequently aggravates the existing disease and renders it incurable.

Now, the object of the operation for consumption is to make a permanent opening in the chest, so as to allow the air to enter freely and compress the lung—to give nature an opportunity (while the lung is in a state of rest) to absorb the diseased matter, or to let the diseased parts be cleared, and to afford the diseased an opportunity to resort to the ligaments or ribs, where they may be benefited. In the first place, the surface of the nature of the chest is not in that position—as in any position in which the patient may be placed, sitting, standing or lying, every movement of the body centres in the head of the thigh bone, and consequently aggravates the existing disease and renders it incurable.

Now, the object of the operation for consumption is to make a permanent opening in the chest, so as to allow the air to enter freely and compress the lung—to give nature an opportunity (while the lung is in a state of rest) to absorb the diseased matter, or to let the diseased parts be cleared, and to afford the diseased an opportunity to resort to the ligaments or ribs, where they may be benefited. In the first place, the surface of the nature of the chest is not in that position—as in any position in which the patient may be placed, sitting, standing or lying, every movement of the body centres in the head of the thigh bone, and consequently aggravates the existing disease and renders it incurable.

Now, the object of the operation for consumption is to make a permanent opening in the chest, so as to allow the air to enter freely and compress the lung—to give nature an opportunity (while the lung is in a state of rest) to absorb the diseased matter, or to let the diseased parts be cleared, and to afford the diseased an opportunity to resort to the ligaments or ribs, where they may be benefited. In the first place, the surface of the nature of the chest is not in that position—as in any position in which the patient may be placed, sitting, standing or lying, every movement of the body centres in the head of the thigh bone, and consequently aggravates the existing disease and renders it incurable.

Now, the object of the operation for consumption is to make a permanent opening in the chest, so as to allow the air to enter freely and compress the lung—to give nature an opportunity (while the lung is in a state of rest) to absorb the diseased matter, or to let the diseased parts be cleared, and to afford the diseased an opportunity to resort to the ligaments or ribs, where they may be benefited. In the first place, the surface of the nature of the chest is not in that position—as in any position in which the patient may be placed, sitting, standing or lying, every movement of the body centres in the head of the thigh bone, and consequently aggravates the existing disease and renders it incurable.

CHAPTER XXXVII. The King's Advocate and Dr. Adams, appeared for the Harlequin, and submitted that it was by the express command of the court that the Abbot's seizure, a part of the cargo having been thrown overboard, and was wholly demolished.

CHAPTER XXXVIII. The King's Advocate and Dr. Adams, appeared for the Harlequin, and submitted that it was by the express command of the court that the Abbot's seizure, a part of the cargo having been thrown overboard, and was wholly demolished.

CHAPTER XXXIX. The King's Advocate and Dr. Adams, appeared for the Harlequin, and submitted that it was by the express command of the court that the Abbot's seizure, a part of the cargo having been thrown overboard, and was wholly demolished.

CHAPTER XL. The King's Advocate and Dr. Adams, appeared for the Harlequin, and submitted that it was by the express command of the court that the Abbot's seizure, a part of the cargo having been thrown overboard, and was wholly demolished.

CHAPTER XLI. The King's Advocate and Dr. Adams, appeared for the Harlequin, and submitted that it was by the express command of the court that the Abbot's seizure, a part of the cargo having been thrown overboard, and was wholly demolished.

CHAPTER XLII. The King's Advocate and Dr. Adams, appeared for the Harlequin, and submitted that it was by the express command of the court that the Abbot's seizure, a part of the cargo having been thrown overboard, and was wholly demolished.

CHAPTER XLIII. The King's Advocate and Dr. Adams, appeared for the Harlequin, and submitted that it was by the express command of the court that the Abbot's seizure, a part of the cargo having been thrown overboard, and was wholly demolished.

CHAPTER XLIV. The King's Advocate and Dr. Adams, appeared for the Harlequin, and submitted that it was by the express command of the court that the Abbot's seizure, a part of the cargo having been thrown overboard, and was wholly demolished.

CHAPTER XLV. The King's Advocate and Dr. Adams, appeared for the Harlequin, and submitted that it was by the express command of the court that the Abbot's seizure, a part of the cargo having been thrown overboard, and was wholly demolished.

CHAPTER XLVI. The King's Advocate and Dr. Adams, appeared for the Harlequin, and submitted that it was by the express command of the court that the Abbot's seizure, a part of the cargo having been thrown overboard, and was wholly demolished.

CHAPTER XLVII. The King's Advocate and Dr. Adams, appeared for the Harlequin, and submitted that it was by the express command of the court that the Abbot's seizure, a part of the cargo having been thrown overboard, and was wholly demolished.

CHAPTER XLVIII. The King's Advocate and Dr. Adams, appeared for the Harlequin, and submitted that it was by the express command of the court that the Abbot's seizure, a part of the cargo having been thrown overboard, and was wholly demolished.

CHAPTER XLIX. The King's Advocate and Dr. Adams, appeared for the Harlequin, and submitted that it was by the express command of the court that the Abbot's seizure, a part of the cargo having been thrown overboard, and was wholly demolished.

CHAPTER L. The King's Advocate and Dr. Adams, appeared for the Harlequin, and submitted that it was by the express command of the court that the Abbot's seizure, a part of the cargo having been thrown overboard, and was wholly demolished.

CHAPTER LI. The King's Advocate and Dr. Adams, appeared for the Harlequin, and submitted that it was by the express command of the court that the Abbot's seizure, a part of the cargo having been thrown overboard, and was wholly demolished.