But where the early flowers Shall bloom upon my grave, And the air with rich, sweet odors, Like a censer o'er me wave : Where gleams of annshine linger,

From early morn till eve, And gloomy clouds shall never Their shadows o'er me wave. There where the ausshine loveth

Over my grave to fall; Where birds shall sing my requiem, And snow-drops form my pull-Where the flerey snows of winter, All glistening with light, Wrup me as with a garment,

Through the long shadowy night-There I shall sweetly slumber, With Christian armour on; Till the day all golden opens
Where no shadow clouds the sun.
