THE COURIER.

THURSDAY, JUNE 19, 1851.

We sometimes learn more of the genius and character of a nation, its strength and resources, its weakness and faults, from a passing hint, promissory allusion, than from the most laborious statistical tables, the pages of the most voluminous history, or the summaries of the annalist, whether favourably or unfavourably compiled.

We have thus a pretty significant hint of what spirit or material the American Naval Officers are in general composed of, and what kind of a service their is. During the short period that America has had a Navy, 1633 Officers have retired from the service, and were an American writing thus of Great Britain, he would not fail to add "with disgust" or some such favorite depreciating phrase.

There are four large entrances to the Hay House, three of which, including the principal one in Notre Dame Street, are in Dubois Square—this portion of retiring habit is a great convenience. On passing into the Hotel through the main entrance, the visitor finds himself in a fine hall, twenty-two feet in height, with an oak floor, and from this ascends the grand staircase the finest in Canada, of massive polished oak, with low broad steps of easy ascent, to the landing.
