"Right" Adopted by the French

few days to a convention delegates with whom one can become well acquainted in an hour is a pleasure. To be deprived for years of every spare room so that strangers may use them is a great hardship. It is borne uncomplainingly "pour la Patrie." Often, alas, the room of the son of the household would be empty but for "les Anglais." The French men who have made the last great sacrifice are numbered by hundreds of thousands and the end is not yet.

The suggestion is heard occasionally that there will be many marriages between British soldiers and French girls after the war. Assuredly much laughter that is not all masculine is heard in billets and elsewhere. There are very many men in transport and similar services located all the way from the English channel to the battle front. It would be strange if the little archer did not hit some of them.

The resultant crop of marriages—big or little—will be to the advantage of France, because it will bind the people on opposite sides of the channel still more closely together.

One of the great discoveries of the war has been France's finding of her soul. Another has been the discovery that the supposedly soft and degenerate, Englishman is as hardy and as tough and resourceful a fighter as his ancestors who followed the great Edward or the dauntless Henry to France centuries ago. A little racial intermixture might benefit both nations. Britain needs France's mental alertness and adaptability; and France could find a place for English physique and resolution.

Both Sides of the Question

There are people who can see and won't, and others who can't see and went to. Those who can see well do not need glasses at present but when they do, it will be their distinct advantage to come here. Those who cannot see well should not delay a day, because delays in matters of the eye are dangerous. We are expert opticians and adjust Glasses to suit all sights.
