The Heir of Bayneham

—AND—
Lady Hutton's Ward.

CHAPTER VI.

The Baynehams of Castle Bayneham were a noble and ancient family. The earldom dated as far back as the reign of the "Merry Monarch." Hulbert Bayneham had been one of his chief favorites, and he delighted to honor him. He created him Earl of Bayneham and Baron of Hulmeor.

Hulbert, the first earl, built Bayneham Castle, and the state apartment is still shown where the king slept when he visited his friend. From Hulbert the line of succession was unbroken—son succeeded father, and each one added some new lustre to the name. Hildebrand, the third earl, was one of England's greatest warriors. Stephen, his grandson, was an eminent statesman; his influence was great, and he used it well. The father of the present earl was remarkable for nothing save having married one of the most beautiful and imperious women in England—Lady Blanche Delamere. She was descended from an illustrious but somewhat decayed family. They had title, rank, position and influence, but very little money, and when Lord Bayneham proposed to the daughter of the house, every one considered it an excellent match. No one ever asked what Lady Blanche thought herself. She had beauty and dignity, and her union with Lord Bayneham gave her everything else; and for many years the beautiful and imperious Countess of Bayneham was one of the most courted and popular women of the day.

She had a younger sister, who, unlike the brilliant countess, married for love; she united her fate with that of an almost penniless captain, Gerald Earle. Fortune however favored them, for before Gerald and his young wife began to feel the evils of poverty, a large fortune was bequeathed to him by a distant relative. Gerald Earle died abroad, and his delicate wife did not long survive him. She had left her only child, Barbara, to the care of the Countess of Bayneham. Her trust was nobly fulfilled; Barbara Earle was treated in every way like one of Lady Bayneham's own children. Her large fortune accumulated; and when she reached her eighteenth year she found herself one of the wealthiest heiresses in England.

The Countess of Bayneham had one fixed idea—it was that her son should marry Barbara Earle. She was deeply attached to the young girl, over whose childhood and youth she had watched so well. Both children were brought up with the same idea, but nothing definite was ever said to them. Lady

"Why?" asked the young earl. "Because unless you go as a married man, you will have every man-vourning mother and chaperon teasing you," said the countess. "I should like you to be married early next spring."

"I have no objection," he replied, "if Barbara is willing."
A shade of annoyance passed over the fair, proud face of the countess. "That is hardly the way to speak, Claude," she said gravely. "I presume already you have no objection; you might surely find some suitable expression."
"I fear I am not clever at finding suitable expressions," said Lord Bayneham with a smile; "they come naturally enough to you, mother."
"You had better see Barbara this morning," said Lady Bayneham, "and ask her if she will consent to the marriage being arranged for next spring."
"Would it not be better for you to speak to her yourself?" said the earl hastily. "Ladies manage these things so much better than we do."
A decided frown darkened the proud, beautiful face.
"Are the men of your race contented to allow others to woo for them?" she asked contemptuously.
Lord Bayneham's face flushed.
"It is different with Barbara," he said; "there is no nonsense about her; she has more sense than any girl I ever met."
Lady Bayneham's face relaxed at this compliment to her beloved niece.
"You will find Barbara in the morning-room," she said; "go and ask her now."

Claude obediently enough quitted the room. It was all a matter of indifference to him. He was not vitally interested in it; it seemed to him a prearranged piece of business, that it was part and parcel of the responsibilities of his estate.

In after years Claude Bayneham remembered that scene. He found Barbara in the morning-room; she was painting a group of flowers with no ordinary skill. When she heard his footsteps a deep, warm flush covered her face, and the hand that held the brush trembled.

"Barbara," said Lord Bayneham, "if you are not busy, I should be glad if you could spare me five minutes."
"Longer, if you like," replied Miss Earle. "My picture can be finished tomorrow. Do you like the grouping of those roses, Claude?"

"Yes," he said; "there seems to be a natural affinity between ladies and flowers. You paint them better than anything else."
"That is a pretty compliment," said Barbara; "but how about Rosa Ben-hour and the roses?"

"You are always hard upon my little attempts at flattery," said Lord Bayneham. "Barbara, I want to talk seriously to you."
"I am ready to listen," said Miss Earle. "What is it? Are we to have a general election? I read something of the kind."
"It is a very different matter I was thinking of," said the young earl, almost at a loss how to introduce the question of marriage, the lady before him looked so very calm and unassuming. "Barbara," he continued, making a desperate effort, "my mother thinks that we had better be married next spring."

"For some moments there was a profound silence. He could hear the ticking of the little watch that lay near him from his childhood. He had yet to learn what it was to love. His father died, and Claude became the Earl of Bayneham. Perhaps no one ever began life under fairer auspices; he was young, handsome, clever, and highly accomplished. Nature and fortune had both been kind to him. He owned one of the proudest names and the finest estates in England. The long and illustrious line of ancestors had each added a laurel to the crown of the Baynehams. Everything and every one smiled upon him. He was one of the happiest of men until that May morning came and brought him to the woods of Brynmar.

When Claude had been two years Lord of Bayneham Castle, his mother told him, in very plain words, she thought it time he should marry.
"A man's position," said the countess, "is never fully established until he is married. I need not tell you how much depends upon the choice of a wife. Fortunately you have made a good choice. You must remember, Claude, you have not mixed much in society since your father's death. I wish you to go to London next season, but I prefer that you should take Lady Bayneham with you."
"Why?" asked the young earl.
"Because unless you go as a married man, you will have every man-vourning mother and chaperon teasing you," said the countess. "I should like you to be married early next spring."

"I have no objection," he replied, "if Barbara is willing."
A shade of annoyance passed over the fair, proud face of the countess. "That is hardly the way to speak, Claude," she said gravely. "I presume already you have no objection; you might surely find some suitable expression."

A SIN TO LET HAIR FALL OUT

35c "Danderine" Saves Your Hair—Ends Dandruff! Delightful Tonic

Hurry! It's your duty! Each day you see a little more hair falling out and you are making no effort to avoid baldness. What a pity. Falling hair means your hair is weak, sick, possibly dandruff is strangling it, or the hair root pores in the scalp are not firm and tight, thus wasting the hair-growing oils.

Danderine almost instantly stops falling hair of men or women, and cleans every particle of dandruff away, then the hair takes on new life, vigor and strength to grow strong, thick, and long.

A PRETTY FROCK FOR AFTERNOON AND EVENING.

4166-4175 Brocaded canton crepe is here shown, with vest and facings of white georgette. This model is pretty for satin, crepe de chine or chiffon velvet.

A NEW STRAIGHT LINE FROCK.

3812. Charming simplicity is featured in this pleasing style. The panels add length and becoming fullness. The closing is invisible at the left side of the front panel. This is a good design for remodeling. Satin and serge, plain and figured silk could be here combined. As illustrated Canton crepe, in a new shade of brown, was used, with a decoration of novelty braid.

A BOY'S PLAY SUIT.

4142. This is a good model for galatee, drill, seersucker, gabardine and serge. The back is made with drop portions. The sleeve may be finished with the cuff or only the sleeveband.

BOYS' BLOUSE AND KNICKER-BOCKER TROUSERS.

Pattern 3436 furnishes these two practical styles. It is cut in 5 Sizes: 6, 8, 10, 12 and 14 years. A 10-year size will require 1 1/2 yard of 36 inch material for the Blouse and 1 1/4 yard for the Knickerbockers.

A NATTY SUIT FOR THE LITTLE MAN.

4170. This is a comfortable style, with new and pleasing features. The inserted pockets in the smock will please the "little fellow." The "knickers" too boast of pockets that are large enough to hold the many things boys like to keep with them. The Pattern is cut in 4 Sizes: 2, 3, 4, and 6 years. To make the suit for a 3 year size, will require 3 3/4 yards of 33 inch material. For knickers alone 1 1/4 yard is required. Pattern mailed to any address on receipt of 10c in silver or stamps.
