RECIPROCITY BILL MAY BE REPEALED; TAFT WILL CONFER

WASHINGTON, July 23.—President Taft has indicated to Republican leaders in the senate a wish to know their views about repealing the Canadian reciprocity act. The senate has already passed repeal provision as amendments to two tariff bills and a separate bill for the repeal of the act has been favorably reported by the finance committee. Mr. Taft, so far, however, has not indicated either to the finance committee or its members that he already favors a repeal but he has let it be known that if senate leaders favored such a measure he wanted to discuss it with them.

BARNEY OLDFIELD, WORLD'S SPEED KING, ARRIVES IN CALGARY; HE LIKES ALBERTA

"I Take Off My Hat; This is the Greatest Country I Have Ever Visited"; Says He Has His Best Cars With Him and Promises Some Thrills

Barney Oldfield, the speed king

Infatuated with the north-west, Barney Oldfield arrived in Calgary late yesterday and the first thing he said was:

"I take off my hat to Alberta. This is the greatest country I have ever visited, and you may bet that, though this is the first time I have come this way, it will not be the last. It is immense and surpasses even what I had imagined."

"Calgary strikes me as the best and liveliest city I have struck in many days. There is something in the very atmosphere here that intoxicates with a desire to stay and when it comes to settling down for life I surely will come here if I do not go to Los Angeles. It strikes me now that it is a toss-up between this city and that. When I say this it means something, too, for I have always considered Los Angeles a garden spot on earth."

"I have become thoroughly in love with the north-west since I started on this tour. Victoria and Vancouver interested me immensely, but the activity of Calgary surpasses either and hits me hard. Enormous crowds have come out to our exhibitions and races everywhere we have shown and much enthusiasm has been manifested over speed. In fact, so much enthusiasm has been shown that I have caught the fever and have been driving in the greatest form of my life."

"I am bringing the fastest cars of my career to Calgary in my 300 horse power Christie and my fast Cino. Along with me are two noted drivers in Lew Heinemann, who handles the Prince Henry Benz, and 'Wild Bill' Fritsch, who also drives the Cino. These cars arrived with us, having been shipped in my special baggage car and we will be able to give fine

SLEUTHS AT THE SHIPS

English Detectives Take Many Noted Fugitives

(From a Foreign Exchange)

"Where have you come from?" a Liverpool detective asked a passenger from America whom he suspected to be a man "wanted" in South Wales. "Sunderland," replied the voyager, as he spoke he thoughtlessly turned round a confectioner's bag he held in his hand—a bag which bore the name of a Wrexham tradesman.

"But you don't come through Wrexham from Sunderland," said the detective, pointing to the bag.

For one moment the passenger hesitated, and then he confessed that he was indeed the "wanted" man.

Equally smart is much of the work done by other detectives who "watch the boats"—that is, keep observation on steamers—arriving at and departing from our ports.

Another Liverpool detective "spotted" on an outward-bound liner a man who was "wanted" in Belgium for murdering a gentleman and his servant. When the merchant was asked he instantly sprang on the officer like a tiger, but, with a lightning blow, he was rendered helpless. He was subsequently handed over to the Belgian police.

Between Ostend and Ghent he killed the police officer in charge of him, and, after taking his jewelry and money, escaped to Lille. Here, through attempting to sell his latest victim's watch, he again fell into the hands of the police, and this time he duly paid the penalty of his crime.

Caught in a Ventilator

There was no less remarkable an incident off Southampton. A detective boarded a North German Lloyd boat, mainly in quest of a German—a married man with three children—who was believed to have sailed for America with a certain young woman. He found the girl, but she was not in her company, and she stated that she knew nothing about him, and that he was not, so far as her knowledge went, on the steamer.

Professing to be satisfied with her explanation, the detective returned to the tender, and then, going back to the ship, through port holes, surreptitiously kept watch on her. In a few minutes she walked up to one of the ventilators. That was enough for the "shadower." He, too, went up to the ventilator, and there, curled inside, was the wretched abductor.

At Dover a detective's knowledge of personal trade marks served him in good stead. He stopped a passenger who answered, in some particulars, to the descriptions of a man—a London jeweler—"wanted" for manhandling. In reply to the usual questions, the traveler stated that he was a barber, going back to Paris, and staggered the detective by producing a return ticket.

"Let me look at your hands," said the detective, after pondering the situation.

"Ah, you're no barber," he went on. "You haven't got the scissors' mark" (a corn on the third finger of the right hand).

The man surrendered without further parley.

Some of the most amusing captures made at ports are those of boys bent on leading a life of adventure in the wild West. A man at Liverpool has restored more than 1,000 of such youths to their parents. Usually the outfit of the "buckaroo" is similar to that of a trio who got no farther than Southampton. It included an accordion intended to be used for fighting away wild animals, and a pair of pistols.

Private detectives stationed at ports also have their adventures. One who was at Hull on behalf of a certain corporation saw a quantity of saccharine, valued at about £1,000, arrive from Rotterdam, and he conveyed into the customs bond. "Made up" to represent the owner, he, a few days later, walked into the bond at 4.55 p.m.—five minutes before closing time—and asked, "Where's my saccharine?"

Without being asked a single question, he was allowed to take away the stuff, which he transported safely to Ferriby, en route for London. But there he had a check. While it was being transferred to a motor car a police sergeant came up, and, refusing to believe that duty had been paid on it, he locked up the detective in the cells all night, and on the following morning took him to Hull.

When, however, matters had been explained, the detective was at once liberated.

PUNISH CRIMINALS; PEN HONORS CEASE

Lima, Peru, July 23.—The immense distance between this city and the Putumayo rubber district, in regard to which Sir Roger Casement recently reported to the British foreign office that wholesale horrors had been committed on the native workers and the difficulty of communication causes considerable trouble in obtaining news from that country. The government some time ago sent a judicial commission accompanied by a body of troops to the district. On their approach many criminals escaped into the forests while others fled to various places from which the Peruvian government is asking their extradition.

Many criminals have been arrested and are awaiting trial. According to the latest official information similar crimes to those reported by Sir Roger Casement as well as ill-treatment are now very rare. However, when they do occur they are generally discovered and their authors punished. The region is said now enjoy relative tranquility.

The prefect of the district is untiring in his efforts completely to blot out the atrocious and the Peruvian government constantly recommends him to continue his energetic measures.

POSTAGE RATE ON PAPERS CALLS FOR PROTEST

London, July 23.—In receiving a deputation protesting against the high postage rate for newspapers, Postmaster General Samuel said the matter was wider than that of mere newspaper carrying. Cheap rates to Canada were possible because the Canadian government bore the cost of sea carriage, regarding cheap Old Country papers as a valuable educational agent. If the other overseas dominions were not prepared to follow in Canada's footsteps, a cheaper newspaper rate applied impartially must mean a heavy loss to his department, and he advanced little hope of alteration.

REFLECTIONS OF A BACHELOR

(From The New York Press)

When a man can fool a girl, it's because she wants him to. What a girl doesn't know she can tell a good deal straighter than what she does. A map heavily in debt has lots of people congratulating themselves on his being in good health.

Diplomacy is treating another man's assurances as if you both didn't know that both of you were lying. By the time a girl gets her thin stockings worn thinner in summer they are nearly the way she will want to wear them in winter.

HERMIT GARDENER WHO HAS PLENTY OF MONEY

Oakland, Cal., July 23.—Tale of a fortune that was never known to have existed was unfolded in the superior court here today when application was made by relatives to have Joseph Kelly declared incompetent and a guardian appointed to look after his affairs. Until the papers in the action were filed Kelly apparently was a plodding gardener living on the pittance that his work brought him. The testimony that was adduced shows him to be a capitalist with extensive interests and a large bank account.

For twenty years Kelly had been gardener on the estate of the late Governor Leiland Stanford at Palo Alto. He received $40 a month as wages. It now develops that he is worth $170,000, of which $30,000 is cash on hand. Kelly is 53 years old. In years gone by he was an attaché at the state legislature, and, as has been shown by the presence of some state officials' salary demands among his effects that have never been cashed, he "scalped" warrants for the public servants. It is thought that this formed the nucleus of his fortune.
