

Remember that success of any sort is contained within yourselves. You carry it with you—a talent, a gift, an ability for business—wherever you go. It is not the place so much—it is the people who go to it—which is the important point ; and I am inclined to think, if you cannot succeed in one place, neither will you in any other. Bearing this in mind, I sincerely advise you to live a diligent and cheerful life in whatever place you fancy ; and I feel sure a moderate income, which is often far more productive of real happiness than great riches, will be your reward.
