uld give that matter the same kind of consideration, as we gave the idea of a North Atlantic Pact.

- 3 -

In a review of international affairs, no matter how brief, is not possible to ignore completely international economic stions, Mr. Chairman. Indeed, in this field it is not easy to by where political questions end and economic ones begin. The portance of sound economic and social policies in our relation to munism and to the communist states is obvious, because our ongest longrun defence against communism is wise and progressive cal and economic policies. The same importance attaches to the nomic relationships between the free democratic states. Economic operation along the right lines can and should bring us closer where. The lack of such co-operation can divide friendly ites. There are signs now that, if we are not careful, our unity d ability to work together may be weakened by international pommic difficulties.

ς.

12

۰.

•

. . .

. . .

î

If, for instance, we let the free world freeze into dollar isterling areas, between which trade relations and commercial tercourse become difficult, that might ultimately prejudice hitical relationships. And so we are becoming, all of us, I ink, more conscious than ever of these international economic friculties as we realize that the post-war dollar assistance begramme may run out before the countries which have been assisted be recovered from the destructions and the dislocations of the r to a point where they can balance by their own efforts their ade with more fortunate countries such as Canada at a satisfactory rel. What should be done in these circumstances by all of the intries concerned, and not merely by our own, is probably the st important question in the whole field of international economic fairs today. My hon. friends opposite keep emphasizing that promic and trade difficulties are increasing. They criticize e government because we have not done more to remove them--mecially because we have done so little, as they put it, to intain and develop trade between Canada and the sterling area. think that they minimize the external problems which have caused see difficulties and maximize the alleged deficiencies of the iternment, its sins of omission and commission in dealing with im. Yet, while inveighing against the government, what remedy they suggest? At the present time, as I understand it, their incipal proposal is a Commonwealth economic conference, as a suble cure for trade ills from which we may be suffering.

Well, we have had a good many Commonwealth meetings during last couple of years, and many of them--indeed most of them-re concerned trade. But hon. members opposite say that these stings have been merely the concern of peregrinating, perambulang representatives, acting on their own by sporadic individual forts. But what we want now, they go on to say, is a fullress, large-scale Commonwealth economic conference of the 1932 riety, with everybody there, to discuss everything--not merely minister for external affairs in Ceylon drinking tea, but erybody, in London, selling food--and, according to the hon. ther for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton), even discussing questions of rigration and emigration. In short, bigger and better conferences, berial super-cabinet conference.

Well, I suggest, that our way is better, where, in addition these formal conferences--and they are of course desirable times--ministers concerned, after full discussion in cabinet, ere policy is agreed upon, meet, whenever occasion requires it, if opposite numbers in London or elsewhere to try to solve rticular problems by arrangements which are then ratified by the