

on the accuracy with which he has interpreted the sentiments of the First Minister. The hon. gentleman must be a kind of clairvoyant; he must have measured the intellectual and political capacities of the hon. gentleman, and prepared a resolution that is in exact accord with his views. Well, we know precisely what this resolution means. When we had a measure of a similar character presented to us last year, we had some difficulty in understanding it. The hon. gentleman declared that it meant Home Rule. Well, Sir, the commentary with which this amendment is accompanied in the speech of the hon. gentleman, will not permit any hon. member on this side of the House to fall into a mistake in regard to the matter.

House divided on amendment of Mr. Davin (p. 126) to the amendment of Mr. McNeill (p. 55):

Dupont,

Amendment negatived.

Mr. CURRAN. With the permission of the House I desire to alter two or three words in my motion, to make verbal changes.

Mr. SPEAKER. By the unanimous consent of the House the hon. gentleman may make those alterations.

Mr. McCARTHY. I do not rise to make any objections to the alterations mentioned by the hon. member for Montreal Centre, but I rise for the purpose of making a personal explanation in answer to the charge made across the floor of the House by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills). Certainly I am not going to inflict upon the House a defence of all my statements, or an answer to the arguments advanced in reply to those which I ventured to use
