Rogers Not Convinced.

Hon. Robert Rogers said he could only account for the Neely amendment being proposed at this stage of the session by supposing that the opposition was ashamed of the Laurier amendment, which, in his opinion, could only be described as "silly twaddle." He said that it was unheard of for any member to move an amendment to the address which dealt with the tariff. Tariff changes should only be announced by the government in the budget speech, and no announcement would be made until that time. He added that, altho the action of the government could not be properly foreshadowed at this time, it was quite unlikely that the wheat ani flour duties would be removed unless stronger arguments were presented to the government than those which had been advanced by the member for Humboldt (Dr. Neely).

Lessen Money Tightness.

Hon. Frank Oliver cited a precedent in the British parliament to prove that an amendment dealing with the tariff question might be properly presented in the debate upon the address. At any rate, this was no time for hair-splitting. The government should have removed the wheat and flour duties months ago by order-in-council. The shortage of money in Canada might have been prevented had our farmers the additional three or four million dollars which they would have obtained by selling at American instead of Canadian, prices.

W. S. Milers Covetous.

Mr. Oliver said there was nothing in the argument that the United States was a wheat exporting country and therefore would not buy Canadian wheat United States millers desired our hard wheat and our wheat was dumped there, selling at the lowest price this fall that has been known for years.

Mr. Thomson (Qu'Appelle), quoted market figures to show that the farmer got a higher price for his floir the United States. The Canadian miller took toll at both ends, paying the farmer less and charging the consumer more.

Mr. McCraney (Saskatoon), said than to question since reciprocity, however, supported free wheat, including nearly all the Conservative farmers and Conservative f

He gave an interesting history of the long contest between the United Shoe Machinery Co. and its customers. The company, he said, had been instructed to amend its leases in conformity with the findings of the board of investigation, and he was advised that it had done so, altho there was still complaint regarding the new leases. Revealed.

The much vaunted Tetrazzini-Ruffo combination was greeted by a three-quarter house at Massay Hall last night, altho the upper gallery and the stage registered capacity. From the standpoint of enthusiasm, the concert was not unsuccessful, altho it lost a great deal of the dignity commonly associated with an event of such magnitude, because both of the stars apparently regarded it as an occasion for mirth rather than one of exhibiting the artistry of which they are both undoubtedly capable. Mme. Tetrazzini herself was the chief offender in this respect. The bow she made on her first entrance was more reminiscent of vaudeville than of the concert stage, and she further exhibited her folicsome mood by smirking at people in the front rows. From the beginning it was apparent that she was not in good form. Her notes lacked the brilliancy and clarity which made her such a favorite on her two former visits, and at times she found difficulty in maintaining the pitch. In the "Caro Nome," her first number, she left out whole passages, which her accompanist was clever enough to cover up. Her best number was the Grand Waltz (Venzano), but only fitful gleams of what she really can do were revealed. Signor Ruffo, the widely heralded bartone, has a truly marvelous voice. It is remarkable in both range and power, it runs so high that in the upper tones it has clear tenor quality. In its middle tones it is unusually warm; only in its lowest tones does it seem ordinary. He sang the Brindisi "Drinking Song" from "Hamlet," as he only can do it, but the Tetrazzini mood seemed to be infectious, and when he acknowledged the applause he bowed so many times and with such rapidity that one felt he wanted more. And over it all stood Leahy, Right by the door where the artists entered he posed while they sang. Few in the audience knew who he was, so it becomes necessary to explain that he is W. H. Leahy, manager. If blame is to be attached to anybody, it will not be either Mme. Luisa Tetrazzini or Signor Titta.
