

and his knowledge attainable by the ordinary exercise of his faculties, on the materials furnished by the surrounding universe, can co-exist and mutually illustrate each other. Mr. Harvey has done so, in the work before us, in a manner that will call forth the admiration and applause of every intelligent reader. He has succeeded in making "the new familiar and the familiar new." Topics that are usually looked upon as dry and uninviting, in his hands are fresh, lucid and attractive.

* * * * Science, popularized and christianized, is at present the great desideratum in our literature. We are therefore very glad to meet Mr. Harvey in the field; and we hope that the present work is but an earnest of what will yet come from his pen."—Halifax Presbyterian Witness.

"We called attention, some time ago, to two works by Mr. Harvey, both of which reflect on him the highest credit, as an able and accomplished man. The present volume fully sustains his reputation. He has grappled with the arguments drawn from Geology in a masterly style; and nothing can be more satisfactory than the manner in which he points out the perfect concurrence in the testimony of nature and revelation."—Irish Presbyterian.

"This is no ordinary book. It is the production of a mind highly gifted, well cultivated, and of refined taste,—a mind that has explored, with skilful earnestness, the Works and the Word of God. The present work not only sustains, but is calculated to increase greatly the author's popularity. In it he undertakes one of the highest and most important exercises which can engage the Christian divine—the harmonizing of science and revelation. He has brought no small amount of reading, talent and reflection to bear upon the various topics which he has discussed. He has done, in harmonizing the sciences, especially Geology with Revelation, what McCosh has done in his "Method of the Divine Government"—condensed and popularized what has been previously written in a dry and formal manner. By a clear conception of the laws of nature, and a right use of the laws of Bible criticism, by a lucid arrangement, and by a graceful, poetical and truly fascinating style, he has rendered plain and pleasing, what to many was dark and painful. We most cordially recommend the volume to all who love the Works and the Word of God."—Armagh Guardian.
