(From an American Paper.)

I dreamed a dream in the midst of my slumbers, And as fast as I dreamed, it came into numbers; My thoughts ran along in such beautiful metre, I'm sure I ne'er saw any poetry sweeter; It seemed that a law had been recently made. That a tax on old bachelors' pates should be laid: And in order to make them all willing to marry. The tax was as large as a man could well earry. The bachelors grumbled, and said 'twas no use: 'Twas horrid injustice and horrid abuse. I sprilling. And declared that is save their hearts' blood from Of such a vite tax they would not pay a shilling. But the rulers determined them still to pursue, So they set all old bachelors up at vendste. A crier was sent through the town to and fro, To rattle his hell and his trumpet to blow, And to call out to all he might meet in his way Ho! forty eld bachelers seld here to-day; And presently all the old maids in the town, Each in her very best bonnet and gown, From thirty to sixty—fair, plain, red, and pale; Of every de injoine, all docked to the sale. The auctioneer then, in hie labour began; And-called out cloud as he held up a man, "How much for a bachelor! Who wants to buy?" In a twink, every maiden responded, "I, I." In short, at a highly extravagant price. The bachelors all were sold off in a trice, And forty old maidens—some younger, some older, Each lugged an old bachelor home on her shoulder!
