It wasn't more'n a year before I went into a room way back at the other end, and while I was looking around there I upset something on the bureau and woke up a man in the bed. ""Well," he says, "what's the matter now?" And I didn't wait to hear any more. I didn't even turn the light on him. I didn't need to. You could tell all you wanted to know about him by his voice. He was a resolute, ablebodied citizen that I could hear getting out of "I made a break for the door and sprinted along the hall, throwing my light and catching sight of that gate again and smiling to myself as I saw it. I swung it around shut after me as I passed and went on down the stairs, leaving the man up stairs coming along the hall overhead with a rush.

"'But it's all right,' I says to myself; 'the gate'll stop him long enough for me to get out easy.' But, by snakes, it didn't stop him at all. On the con-trary, it helped him. Just as I was stepping down from the last step on to the floor of the half below the man fell on my back. He'd been coming along the hall above so fast that he couldn't stop himself, and he fell over the gate, turned a summerset in the air on the staircase and came down a heap faster'n I did and landed on me. Instead of breaking his own back he pretty near broke mine.

"We rolled over and over on the floor in the hall, the man laughing fit to kill and said: That's the fort of a man he was. It was the funniest thing he'd run up against in a long time. "He never once thought of stopping me, not once, but he says, when he was

Mosquitoes and snowflakes are not contemporaries in the States, but in Alaska it is different. Snow does not bother them so much as rain, and an early snow may fall while they are still on the wing. Fog does not choke them either. They appear to like it. They float about in it as in ambush and take the unwary prospector by surprise.—

A correspondent writes: Away in the southwest of Scotland somewhere there lives, moves and has her being a little "But there is none here," replied the lives, moves and has her being a little girl named Mona MacBean. On the first day of March Mona was late in arriving at school and detailed off to write ber name 50 times. The man smiled, but he thought there might be something in it after all. So he began to have faith in the healer. ts Was Something of a Surprise Whea Served at Dinner. "Madam, you don't know how to make, cake!" exclaimed Mr. Smith, Mersereau's Photo Rooms, throwing a lump of half cooked dough across the room at the cat. "You never thew how to make cake. I'd rather eat

"Well, why don't you? You are all talk!" Smith found himself cornered, and felt very uncomfortable, as he had either to surrender unconditionally or to make good his boast. He had never made a cake in his life, had no idea how cakes were compounded, but thought he knew what was in them

"I'll make the cake," he said.

"Well, come into the kitchen and make it," proposed his wife.

"What, now?" "Yes, now. I'll get the things for floor of this house, with this stairway pretty near at the front end of it. I Smith took off his coat, his collar and necktie and rolled up his shirt sleeves They walked to the kitchen together, and Smith said:

"What shall I mix it in?" "Ob, you're doing it," Mrs. Smith "Ah, this will do," he said, taking up a bowl. "Now bring me some water, now some raisins and currants, sugar and ginger and allspice. There, that will do." He put them all into the bowl and mixed them with a spocu. "They don't seem to stick together," he said. "Looks more like a thick soup than anything else. Fancy I've got too much water." Smith drained off some of the water and was about to put the cake into a pan, when his wife said:

"Didn't your mother use flour?" "Oh, yes—yes—ah, yes—flour, of course." Then he mixed in flour until One man who never bought a sack from him before came in and laid in a winit was so stiff that he could hardly knead it. "Now," said he, "I'll take ter's supply. And the smooth merchant whistled softly as he filled the sacks and this cake round to the baker's and have it baked properly." He started off, and when he reached the baker's he maid: "Will you just throw this stuff away and put in its place one of your bes plum cakes?" That night at supper Mrs. Smith had her mother and sister with her. She had told them of the cake, and they were expecting great fun at Smith's expense. The cake did not come until sup-per time. Smith took it from the boy man's allotted number of years, and I am now 55 years old. The time is too "This is my cake—something like a

Too Much Culture. "Aunt Penelope Wiggins," as everybody called her, was visited one sum-mer by a niece from the east, a Vassar college graduate. A man out at Rogers park broke his One day while he was alone at the house a woman book canvasser was ad-"Oh, dear, no! You wouldn't have me begin it on Friday, would you?" mitted. After she had failed to sell him what she had she asked him what the matter was. He told her and said that he feared he would be a cripple for life.

"Humph!" said the woman. "There is no need of that now since Christian science is doing so much."

"I have heard a great deal about Christian science," said the man, "but I never heard that it could cure a trouble like mine." "Why not?" asked the woman. "Is is doing greater things than that every man. "Well," said the woman, "I'm something of a healer myself. I can't stay here, but I'll tell you what I'll do. I'll give you the absent treatment. You just stay where you are, and I'll cure your short leg." And she went away. tion and discovered to his great aston-ishment that his short leg was nearly as long as the other. He was delighted. "That woman was all right," he said to his wife, "and I have done her a great injustice in smiling in my disbelief." In a fortnight more both legs were of equal length. He left his room for the first time in several months and went to business. He proudly showed his leg to all his friends and told every one of the marvelous means by which he recovered. Everything went well for a time, but presently the man made the astonishing discovery that the cured limb was still growing. In another two weeks it was fully two inches longer than the one which had not been broken and that it was the well leg on which he now limped.

This naturally worried him very much. You see, there was no telling where it would end. Then he recollected, too, that he had no idea who the healer was, or where he could find her. He could not even remember the name of the book she was trying to sell. And that is how the matter now stands. The man's leg is still growing. That woman is still gadding around the country sell-ing books and giving him the absent treatment. If he does find her, she will have to begin on the other leg, and ever then the man will only be fit for the dime museum. The man's faith in the new science is still unbroken, but he feels that the healers should be securely auchored and kept within certain bounds.—Chicago Chronicle.
